Trump Hate:

By
Brian W. Kelly

They Hate Trump Supporters; Trump; & God—In That Order.

The people have had enough!

The hateful impeachment of Donald Trump began long before he was elected. The left wants him gone, period. Trump hammers back at the political establishment & they hate him for his success.

Trump Hate: They Hate Trump Supporters; Trump; & God—In That Order.

The people have had enough! The hateful impeachment of Donald Trump began long before he was elected. The left wants him gone, period. Trump hammers back at the political establishment & they hate him for his success

We're sick of the hate. James D. Veltmeyer, MD from LaJolla nailed it: "The savagery, frenzy, and outright hysteria displayed by the President's enemies within the Democratic Party, the media, and various power centers of the globalist elites, have no prior precedent."

Donald Trump got elected because the majority of the voters had begun to no longer trust Democrats or Republicans. The regular people in America decided that they could trust Trump and in fact, they continue to trust him to do what is best for America. Trump has not let the people down. The left cannot stand that fact.

Americans had gotten sick of the elected officials in all levels of government doing the bidding of slimy politicians or political donors and hacks in the various government swamps. Donald Trump came across as the only candidate for president who offered Americans a breath of fresh air from the stodgy, bossy, establishment elites in both major parties. That's why I voted for Trump. He was brave enough to defy the status quo of rich donors controlling the government for their personal benefit. Trump is rich enough thanks to his father's and his own cunning business sense that he alone of all candidates did not have to suck up to the seedy side of life just to get elected.

Everybody has an opinion but too many people have their opinion shaped by crooked politicians and crooked news media. The Crooked News Network, CNN tops the untrustworthy media scoundrel list. So many of my good friends who are otherwise smart people believe CNN like it is Christ's gospel. I mean even good people that cannot see their own faults because CNN tells them how it is. Too many people for example get all their news from crooked CNN. Yet it is now fact that at 9:00AM daily, CNN executives get their marching orders from the president of this network news organization. More or less, they are told to avoid being fired, they must continually strengthen all aspects of the political (no facts needed) effort to disparage to the death, President Trump. That must be their focus above the people's news—or they better read the WANT Ads. .

Trump holds rallies of from 20,000 to 50,000 people who believe that Donald J. Trump loves America and American traditional values. Look at the goodness that he instilled into his own children. He is not a liberal fool or a progressive socialist tool who hates America. He is simply for America and Americans first. So are you and I if we really think about it.

The corrupt anti-American mainstream press has recently merged with the corrupt Democrat Party. Together they regurgitate the most obnoxious collection of hate known since the Civil War. So, now together, they hate Trump because he represents normal Americans and not the fringe actors who have together decided to unseat him as president and crown Hillary for the job. This pond scum has no rallies like Trump because there would be few attendees.

Moreover, the stench of their corruption would be too strong for normal breathing assistance devices. Americans who love America could not endure the mephitic. Nefarious shameful left-leaning political leaders preach that Trump is bad, bad, bad. Good people are swayed by the miscreants who care little for the truth. Trump calls them all out as the fakes they are. They hate him because he is not controlled by anyone—Dem Party or wimpy swamp-rat-dwelling Republicans. Neither give Trump an inch and they undermine America by undermining our president. When America is gone, then what? See page 3 next:

Continued from page 1: The prior opponent of Donald J. Trump in the 2016 election for president was none other than the inglorious Hillary Rodham Clinton. In a national presidential debate, she had vowed to accept the results of a fair and honest American election even if she were to lose. Unfortunately, for America she was only kidding. Since the election, her forces have worked tirelessly with the Democrat Party and the corrupt media to muster up enough national hate to unseat the duly elected President, whose name happens to be Donald J. Trump.

Those investigating all the shams regarding the Trump election and the Deep State plot to destroy him have found that Hillary had a major role. As the primary perpetrators of the hate and the hoax, her team lied about it all. Many investigative reporters have given reports and their unified word is that Mrs. Clinton is behind mostly all of the efforts to remove Donald Trump from office. Yet, she asks her fawning media to not portray her actions as those of a sore loser. What do you think?

When Trump first ran for president, the once Secretary of State had caused four Americans with mothers and fathers back home to be killed in Benghazi and the press would not even acknowledge the story. Something was wrong, and you know what it was. Trump was ready to forgive her but she wanted Trump out.

The Democrats & mainstream press have corrupted America so that their whopper lies and their leadership on the hate parade, are often taken as truth. The country needed Donald Trump and Mike Pence to bring America back to reality and truth. That's why Trump got elected and it is why never-Trumpers fear correctly he again is to be elected in 2020.

Good people still feel the scourge of the dishonest politicians and the biased, corrupt press. Even good Democrats, few as there may be, such as my own liberal sister-in-law, were in many ways pleased when Hillary lost. The spew that this candidate fostered was as bad as that of the "Squad" who would rather Sharia Law than our Constitution.

Each election the people over the years have decided whether a Muslim should run America or a Christian, Agnostic, or an atheist or another non-Christian. As a matter of truth, Democrats have given up both God and love of country to side with the vapid scoundrels that want to change America to become socialist and perhaps even a communist nation. Our current president has promised to fight against them. That is the big reason that they hate him and why those Americans that can still think clearly love to support President Donald Trump.

Before President Trump, the country's issues included oppressive taxation; legal and illegal immigrants stealing the best jobs; regulations choking businesses; huge debt and deficits shackling our capital resources; a government Obamacare system that added taxes and made health worse; and corporate offshoring, which created a weaker nation.

Mrs. Clinton was ready to continue this Obama program because she supported the former president's policies 100%. It did not matter to Mrs. Clinton that these policies had created the whole mess in the first place. The people clearly voted "NO."

Additionally, on the problem side, we had a massive energy dependency on our enemies. The Obama regime redistributed wealth from producers to non-producers. We permitted a huge, growing, inefficient government to operate. The former government officials continually lied, taxed too much and spent more than it had. By their actions, in the years before Donald J. Trump, our government became Public enemy # 1 of the people. A good plan, endorsed by Mr. Trump, along with good leaders such as the duo of Donald Trump & Mike Pence have been in place for 3 years, and are already saving US from Obama. This former perdition was all that was in the offing. In a nutshell, this is why Trump got elected! IMHO, only a fool would want to go back to those days. If you like the truth about America, you will love this book and many others by your author, Brian W. Kelly.

Acknowledgments:

I appreciate all the help that I have received in putting this book together as well as all of the other 217 books from the past.

My acknowledgments were so large at one time that readers complained that they had to go through too many pages to get to page one.

And, so I put my acknowledgment list online, and it continues to grow. Believe it or not, it now costs about a dollar less to print my books. No kidding!

Thank you and God bless you all for your help. Please check out www.letsGOPublish.com to read the latest version of my heartfelt acknowledgments updated for each book.

In this book, I received some extra special help from many fine American patriots including Dennis Grimes, Gerry Rodski, Joyce Edward Heck, and Wily Ky Eyely, a most erudite continual contributor.

Continuing the new list is Angel Irene McKeown Kelly, Angel Edward Joseph Kelly Sr., Angel Edward Joseph Kelly Jr., Ann Flannery, Angel James Flannery Sr., Mary Daniels, Bill Daniels, My good buddy Robert Garry Daniels, Angel Sarah Janice Daniels, Angel Punkie Daniels, Joe Kelly, Diane Kelly, Brian P. Kelly, Mike P. Kelly, Katie P. Preface:

Would it not be nice if we could take hate out in a field and burn it at the stake. They say that was what they did to witches. Witches are nowhere close to the scum we tolerate in America today—those that hate and hate some more hoping to unseat a duly elected president of the United States. You are living through it so you know.

One of the prevailing reasons given in my informal survey of Trump haters for why they hate Trump is that he is an incessant liar. I always ask for examples and their responses are always dubious. For example, they will often give me a well-debunked CNN or MSNBC. NY Times, or other lefty news organizations outright lie about how Trump lied in a given situation. That is their proof of fact. They lie to prove Trump lies. Non Sequitur!

Because it would hurt their hate-based case, the major media rarely includes in their assessment of Trump's truthfulness the unchallenged fact that all presidents lie, because in many job situations, they most. Additionally, as we look at big liars in the White House, the most consequential presidential liar was Lyndon B. Johnson. Check him out and remember he was a big Democrat. Most Americans see the difference between an out-and-out lie and self-evident hyperbole, even though the mainstream press and Trump's political opponents refuse to acknowledge light-hearted braggadocio.

Some of the least likely news personalities that Americans are apt to believe on anything, offer the worst condemnations of Trump, the supposed prevaricator. For example, MSNBC's Chris Matthews, a recognized pompous ass in most people's worlds, and recently accused of pompous paternalism. wrote about the role of falsehood in the "Age of Trump." A review of the book suggests that Matthews outdid himself by letting it all hang out.

Matthews set himself up as the judge and jury of lies and fairness and declared that the president "lies the way a woodpecker attacks a tree: compulsively, insistently, instinctively." It feels, he wrote, "as if something has ripped in the fabric of reality of America at this moment.” He labeled Trump a “demagogue,” using the reigning cliché of the mainstream media about the president. Chris Matthews, no a pinnacle of respect in American news-watching homes, obviously never looks in a mirror. When I hear Matthews pick on anybody it reminds of the worst thing a kid could say years ago: “I know you are but what am I.” Good night Chris.

What a shame about them and their hate, but it is true. The drive-by media are propagators of propaganda and do not serve well as a reference for pointing out anything about anything. They lie continually and other news organizations then swear to it. There is no legitimate reason for any of the hate spewed at Mr. Trump. It is a façade for their “get rid of Trump” three year narrative.” They can’t love Trump and say he needs to be ousted, so they create issues for which to hate him.

One thing they all seem to agree on is that nothing Trump can do can redeem him from his plight. Everybody in the world, alive or dead are granted the right of redemption by God except for Donald Trump. So sayeth the Democrats and the drive-by media.

Do as I do instead of do as I say. You’d swear that CNN always tells the truth but it is not so. Please permit me to use CNN or NY Times or MSNBC or any of the left-wing press singularly in the rest of this book to represent all left wing media as it will make it easier for you and I and I will thus use lots less words than to cover all of the lefties. After all, it is a given that if the major left NY Times says it—lie or truth—about Trump, all the media lackies follow suit and the public is saturated.

The latest example pointed out by Rush Limbaugh continually on his radio show is that the people driving this impeachment notion are left-wing base voters who have been subjecting themselves to and buying 100% all of this media claptrap for over two years. From the show:

“They were told every day, “Trump’s gone.” They were told every day, “Trump colluded.” They were told every day, “Trump was a cheater.” They were told every day that Trump colluded with Putin, that Trump stole the election... that Hillary was the legitimate winner! Trump was not.” They were told every day that Trump cheated, told every day that Trump was just the worst reprobate ever.” They did not have to believe it.

Yet, they believed it—and can you blame ’em? I mean, their media assured them it was so and when CNN says so, it is better than E F Hutton.. So they had no problem believing CNN. I mean, they didn’t really need the media, but the media was there daily, if not hourly, for reinforcement.

Rush Limbaugh noted that this was one of the things that constantly amazed him and still amazes him. The media, aka CNN et al, that has lied to and misled its entire audience has yet to admit the truth or apologize for the lies. It has yet to ask any forgiveness, has yet to even explain it. They just move on to the next phony hoax, taking what’s left of their audience with them. Limbaugh quotes accurate statistics frequently about how quickly CNN and other left wing media are losing their audience.

He then explained why they believe it all hook, line, and sinker. “But these people are imbalanced to begin with. They’re liberals. They’re not solidly put together. They’re not mentally adjusted anyway—and then you lie to them every day and you build up their expectations that what they want most in the world, Trump in jail, is only a matter of time away from happening.

And, folks, I don’t know how many of you took the time to watch all that. I did. From the New York Times, to the Washington Post, to CNN, to MSNBC, they did everything but promise that Trump was guilty. Time and again, the media was proven wrong and yet, their loyal followers who will not watch Fox, will not listen to conservatives such as Hannity and Rush himself, long to get in their easy chairs and turn the station to CNN for “the only truth.” No kidding!

When Trump came down the escalator I was not sure he was my guy but the more I saw the “We Love Obama and Hillary” networks and writers defame Trump, the more I liked him and I loved his pro-people, anti-swamp message. Trump took a while to get accustomed to the debate stage but he got better and better and his message was solid: America First!. It was about time.

By the time the election period came, I knew that I was voting for Donald Trump. I am a registered Democrat so I had to wait until the general election. In PA Dems cannot vote in the R primary. My sister-in-law, an always major liberal switched to Republican despite the left's message to hate Trump, just so she could vote for Trump. I was amazed. More and more Pennsylvanians were clamoring for the truth. There still is no truth in the Democrat Party.

For me, Trump quickly broke through the pack of Republicans and began his showdowns with his real opponent, Hillary Clinton. Like many Democrats, I had had enough of the Clintons, but my predilection to Trump was more because of him and not because of Clinton. It had more to do with the fact that he reminded me of a last man standing to prevent a huge country from going off a big cliff.

At the end of the day, when the dust had settled, and the battle was over, the last man standing won. Donald Trump won the election despite all odds. In many ways he got elected because he was the last man standing between an Obama-American hell-hole and a return to the Promised Land of our founders.

Despite the Democrats' failure to accept the results of the election and their incessant attempts to undue the results of the election through one scheme after another, Trump is more popular today than when he got elected. His supporters respect him because despite some human failings as we all have, he is a good man and he is keeping his promises to the American people despite taking flack from all sides on every issue.

For many regular guys, such as myself, President Trump represents a welcome change from establishment elitist politics. He genuinely loves America and he works for Americans first. His great ideas for solving the issues facing America today lined up with the thinking of most Americans who were paying attention and who were annoyed at the prior administration and wimpy Republicans who would rather grease their own skids than work for the good of the American people.

I am glad that you are reading this book, so you too can understand why Donald Trump was not a default for president. He was the clear choice of Americans who think. I wrote an essay early in his campaign that I titled: God gave us Donald Trump. I stand by that thought even after the Democrats continued to add Russian and now Ukrainian characters into their daily soap opera.

They may not have hated Trump initially. They just wanted to get rid of him—within hours of his election, Now, they hate him because, despite them using up their bag of tricks, Trump ill not go away and the people, especially at his rallies encourage him to stay the course and win a big victory for Marica and Americans.

They are sore losers and they are happy to lie and cheat to have their way. The union of the corrupt media with the Democrat party makes Americans who love America see how dishonest they are in their attempts to do anything to have their way.

For thinking Americans who are not brainwashed by CNN, the Democrat shenanigans are getting old. Three years of the same crap is more than enough. Their sham impeachment is just another day of the soap opera that lowers my respect for Democrats more and more every day. I have never been more pleased with a vote than my vote for Donald J. Trump. Along with many, many Americans, I am ready to cast it the same again in 2020. You too?

Nobody is perfect. Even JFK loved the opposite sex a little too much and Bill Clinton had his problems that were far worse than Trump's Donald Trump has a fine wife, Melania and wouldn't we all like to have a life like his with such a loving family. With a bunch of kids of his own, he is clearly pro-life and makes his stance on that major issue well known. He is anti-infanticide—a new platform for the Democrats. He is for America first. Whatever he was in the past, I forgive him. I am pleased as are many Americans that he is working hard for us. The media and Democrat hate mongering does not affect us.

Yes, he is a great man and he is already becoming a great president for you, me, and all those who love America. I asked a number of my friends who are anti-Trump on everything. I asked them to respond to a set of questions about why they hate Trump so much. I wanted facts and examples, not CNN's opinion. They were all ready to offer their opinion like he's a liar etc. but they had no facts as ammunition and decided in the end not to submit a response.

When we hit Chapter 2, I will reveal the questionnaire and you will see that Trump haters simply cannot come up with facts—just CNN's distorted opinion of the facts. They won't give the tax cut back but they claim it helped only the 1%ers. Many of these folks are well-to-do which quite frankly lets them pretend that Trump is not necessary. But for regular Americans, he is a god-send.

Trump is very smart. He knows business and we are already experiencing an enlivened economy. With substantial foreign business experience, he is setting America up as the top dog in the world, and as expected, he is making no apologies.

Trump is a tough American, so we can count on not being pushed around in foreign affairs or delicate negotiations. Our new president as expected, is a winner all the way around. He hates to lose and seldom does. The bulk of Americans are very happy that we now have someone in charge who believes we can win, and he is leading us all in our new winning ways. .

The weaknesses of the Republican Party came out in spades in the primary season in 2016 and continued as weak-kneed RINO such as Jeb Bush, John Kasich, Lindsey Graham, John McCain RIP, and the Fake American, Mitt Romney decided to become tools for the Democrats. During the campaign Donald Trump did not even give them lip service.

In his own way, Mr. Trump told them and all the establishment elites where to go. I like that. These RINOs and their Marxist friends across the aisle had been destroying America for their own benefit for too many years. It took a guy with guts and stamina to beat them.

The last man standing stood against them and won a great victory for the American people.

Donald Trump first whooped everybody who was anybody in the GOP. He then ran against a person that some call a withered fascist--Hillary Clinton. There were many Democrats like me who felt that we could not afford a big liar like her in the White House. We were all in for Donald J. Trump.

For those who can ignore the media fake news and outright lies, there is plenty to admire and respect about President Trump. Watching his children in action at the GOP convention in 2016 and the chemistry within the family, Americans got the full sense of what a fine man and a fine dad he really is.

I had the good fortune several weeks ago to be channel surfing as a huge Trump Rally was about to take place in Minneapolis. I sat on the edge of the bed and watched the Trump Rally speech wipe out about half of the Tucker show, the entire Hannity show, and half or more of the Ingraham Angle. It was riveting.

Trump stood up there saying everything Americans believe in and Democrats are afraid to hear and the corrupt media choose to not report. He's already done more for America and Americans than any president—ever. You could see his experience and his Wharton School education in action. What a smart man and excellent speaker. His talk was about two full hours and it was fascinating. I needed a bio break and yet he persisted and gave no courtesy breaks to supporters glued to his every word. It was historical I ran to the facilities as soon as he hit his Keep America Great Crescendo.

I was so keyed up that when I came back and Fox put the repeat of the rally back on, I watched a major part of it again. CNN won't show Trump Rallies because they are in the Dem tank and they would lose a lot of Dem swimmers who get all their news from CNN if they ever showed the real Trump without their negative annotations. So, for all good Americans I have included every word of the Minneapolis speech in its own chapter of this book. I hope you like it and you believe that it is well worth your time. God Bless America. You won't get anything like this from the crooked US press.

America needs Donald Trump—a businessman and a great negotiator to compete in the world. We learned big time that we did not need somebody like the former president who unfortunately for the country found business as a necessary evil. Barack Obama chose to have nothing to do with sound business principles while being in charge of the US economy. Hillary Clinton was ready to execute a same-ole strategy—more of the same—more or less Obama redux. The people said “no.”

Former President Obama gave the impression for years that he had true disdain for America and Americans. It was as if he would have loved all Americans to give up their freedoms and become government dependents in a socialist or communist America.

I am convinced he would have liked America to give up its position as #1 in the world. Trump is clearly for America and Americans-First. He demonstrated that time and time again in his nearly 400 huge campaign rallies. Trump was a Nationalist running as a Republican because it made business sense to not go third party.

Hillary was more like Obama—socialist and Marxist. She came off even more radical than Obama. For example, Hillary never seemed to be too keen on freedom. She likes her own freedom for sure but not yours. She was working on eliminating the Bill of Rights and had already earmarked the 1st and 2nd Amendments of the Constitution for removal.

Yes, we were at the point in which a presidential candidate's position of not being actively opposed to the Bill of Rights was a key selling point for their candidacy.

The GOP today is still full of losers and babies who won't even keep their vows made in the pledge to support the Party's own nominee. Mitt Romney is the worst GOP of the worst GOPs since Lincoln. No wonder the prior president was treated as an emperor. His sad agenda received no interference from the whiny and wimpy Republicans. They quaked at the sight of Obama. Trump doesn't quake at anything. He's not only American. He's an all-American.

For years, I have hoped that somebody such as Rush Limbaugh or Donald Trump or somebody with influence and power and money would come along to change our two-party system. I put my vision to words in two books, the first, written five years ago titled, Kill the Republican Party, and the second written in the summer of 2018 titled It's Time for the John Doe Party.

The idea is to rid the party of the swamp and start over again with a new name such as The American Party or the John Doe Party, hoping to attract all current Republicans other than the swamp, and all Democrats who are like me, pro-American to a fault. It is still a dream yet for many like me we are watching the Republican Congress very closely. So far, they stink.

For this ole conservative Democrat, the Republicans for years—even when my dad and I voted together before he died, always seemed to be the better choice than the far-left whacko Democrats. Yet, after Reagan, there were still bad choices and weak men.

Donald Trump has a lot of Reagan toughness and goodness in him. He has a great plan for America and in this book, we talk about the respect most Americans have for the President. First of all, he was and continues to be the best choice. Second, he is honest. Third, he will keep his word and keep America great again in ways in which Americans will all be pleased.

I sure hope you enjoy this book and I hope that it inspires you to continue to take action. Our Congress can certainly be more pro-American and more responsive to the people's needs and not their own. I hope the book in some ways helps you look at things differently. Our new president has settled in and he is already implementing a host of innovative items on his agenda. I hope you digest Trump's entire plan, be willing to adopt it, and add to it your own positive notions for building a better America. And, please do not trust the press to do your thinking for you.

Together, we can help make the US a far better country. We should smile as we have accomplished our first and best objective. We now have a president who loves America and Americans. We elected Donald Trump as our president. Now, we must support his hard work and speak up to the Congress when they get in his way. When you hear Democrats and the media talking about how much they hate Trump, don't forget to smile and think to yourself. That's all they have.

Chapter 1 Trump is an Existential Threat to New World Order

Trump & supporters not welcome at elite Republican Club

He can't be a member of their elite club.

As of December 2016, Trump owned 16 golf courses in the United States and abroad. He also owns about 500 various businesses. Despite his success, Donald Trump is cursed to be a soloist in life. I am glad God gave him the guts to go it alone and he has no problem going it alone. He may knock a few elitists off their high perches as he goes about his daily business but he doesn't mind at all.

Trump actually has more employees (before he was president) than some people have friends. He has so many employees that chances are CNN or one of the bad guys out there could probably find one out of the lot of them, who does not like his or her boss. I bet they could find one who would deny Trump admission to one of his own clubs if he or she could do so. Hate is such an amazing attribute; it is almost undefinable. e

More and more Americans are waking up, listening to the radio, watching TV, talking to the neighbors, the grocers and the auto-mechanics and it is not the same as the good old days. For the most part, people do not seem to have the same sense of respect for each other. Then again, there are people who feel it is their duty to spread venom about Donald Trump so they could be more likable to their left wing friends.

The Trump haters out in captivity had made it tough for everybody else or so it seems. It is tough to escape it. The best advice until we get a solution is to ignore it and lead your life. That's what Trump does but leading his life often involves striking back at the venom with stronger medicine. Mr. Trump takes nothing lying down.

Before I get to the essence of this introductory chapter, let me tell a story. I love to write and I often have a point in what I write about. Few things I scribe are aimless. I did write a meaningless poem one day when I was working for my college alma mater and a few of the "guys" were taking a break. The poem took no grey matter to compose. My hand with pencil never stopped moving for the minute or two it took to put the words on paper. I was having fun. The result was silly and meaningless but one man's trash is another man's treasure.

Here is the poem. Don't get upset please. I am making a point.

The Negro

*The ripple stuck to the gopher's mouth
And the wart remained in the deepest South.
The Warbler, warbled, and looked astout.
But, didn't know what it was all about.*

*And, then, came the country mouse without his hat.
And, three baseball players without any bat.
So, without any ice cream...*

That's all folks. Gibberish right?

My buddy George Halas (yes that was his real name) was a pseudo-intellectual on break with me at the time and he commended me on the spot for what I had just created. I thought he was kidding. He suggested submitting it to the SCOP and he added the title, “The Negro”

I submitted four poems to the King’s College literary magazine called the SCOP. The one above was the one about which, I was the least proud. Life is funny.

My buddy Bucko Grimes was in W. Francis Swingle’s English Class the day the SCOP came out in our Senior Year. He told me they loved it. They analyzed it to pieces. It was the only poem in the SCOP that they chose to examine. “And what do you think the author meant by...” You know how those English sessions go. Bucko could not wait to tell me about it.

I needed to prepare myself for all the hate we will discuss in this book. Like you, I am deeply troubled about all the hate in America today. I have never seen it like this—ever. Most Americans do not like nowadays with all the hate coming mostly about Donald Trump and mostly from Democrats. So, until this work was completed, I kept looking for material to add to this book to make my point about what’s up and of course, what we regular Joe’s can do about it.

Besides what I had already written at this point, I did not want to try the extreme stream of semi consciousness that I employed in writing the above poem. I was looking to the muse for help as I did know what I wanted to say but I did not know what the right theme or the right words should be. I figured by late afternoon on “today,” that I would have to go through a full REM sleep and spend some quiet time to get the Muse clicking . I did not know what I wanted but I knew I did not have it yet.

In between periods of editing, writing, and correcting grammar, I would check email and one of my favorite blogs as there was an election yesterday in Wilkes-Barre and I had a dog in the fight. Then I opened an email from a friend of mine that we can call Budso. Bud had been a chem major in college so I always thought he was smart when we worked at IBM in Scranton years ago. But then again, valences can't solve everything.

Target on Trump's back!

In Budso's email, he started with "This was provided to me from one of my Democrat friends who admits that it really does seem like there has been a target on Trump's back regardless of what he does. Though, he, like I don't particularly like Trump as a person, his policies are in fact what is creating this establishments destroy at all cost mantra."

"This article from a well-respected individual is a well written summary of the current state of affairs in the world and the impact that Trump is having on everything...if you agree, please forward! Bill.

How about that, Budso forwarded Bill's intro. I suspect he agreed with it. So do I.

TRUMP: EXISTENTIAL THREAT TO NEW WORLD ORDER

By James D Veltmeyer, MD

The ongoing attacks by the political establishment on President Donald Trump, which began even before he was elected – are without parallel in history. The savagery, frenzy, and outright hysteria displayed by the President's enemies within the Democrat Party, the media, and the various power centers of the globalist elites have no prior precedent.

This President has been spied on, lied about, made the subject of phony foreign dossiers, insulted, ridiculed, scorned, mocked and threatened. We have witnessed Hollywood celebrities advocate for blowing up the White House, demand the President be beaten, jailed or even assassinated, and his children tortured and sexually abused. We have seen politicians in Washington try to convict the President of non-existent crimes, investigate him and his family members for everything from tax returns to guests at his hotels, project on to him crimes that they themselves have committed, and seed his Administration with leakers and double-agents.

No other President in American history has been treated in such a shameful manner. Not Lincoln. Not FDR. Not Nixon. Not Reagan. What is it about this President that has roused such demons in his political foes? What is it about this President that drives his opponents to the brink of insanity? What is it about this President that so terrifies and terrorizes the Pelosi's, Schiff's, Schumer's and the George Soros's?

Is it simply that he is not part of the club, a brash outsider with a different style? Is it merely because he's outspoken and tramples on political correctness? Is it because he's sometimes unpresidential in his demeanor (at least in their minds)?

Not at all. After all, aren't these the same folks who loved Bill Clinton whose extracurricular activities involved cigars and staining blue dresses in the Oval Office?

Of course, Clinton was beloved by the globalist elites who pull the strings on world governments. He gave them NAFTA, after all. He gave them the WTO. He made tens of billions of dollars for them and their stockholders through these unfair trade deals that cost America five million manufacturing jobs and closed 70,000 factories. He also gave the military-industrial complex plenty of profit-making military interventions, from Haiti to Bosnia to Serbia and Iraq. Bill Clinton, for all his corruption, delivered the goods for the New World Order.

Donald Trump, of course, never played ball with these globalists. He was elected explicitly on an anti-globalist platform that put America first. From day one, he started to implement that America-first agenda, earning him the undying enmity of all those whose profits are secured by selling out American workers, American jobs, and America's national sovereignty.

President Trump pulled us out of the TPP. Billions in lost profits for the globalists.

President Trump pulled us out of the job-destroying Paris Climate Accords. Billions in lost profits for foreign nations like Communist China, at our expense. Read NASA's Report.

President Trump began the process of securing the U.S. border. Billions in lost cheap illegal immigrant labor for the Business Roundtable.

President Trump imposed tariffs on China, becoming the first President ever to address Beijing's annual $500 billion rape of our economy. Billions in lost profits for corporations who ship our jobs to one of the worst tyrannies on the planet.

President Trump renegotiated NAFTA. Again, billions in lost profits for the cheap labor crowd.

President Trump launched the process of extricating the U.S. from endless foreign wars and avoiding new wars with nations like Iran and North Korea. Billions –perhaps trillions – in lost profits for the globalist war machine.

Is the picture becoming a little clearer? In each instance, the President's policies have represented a dramatic upending of the globalist agenda of both parties, the Carter-Bush-Clinton-Bush-Obama agendas of continuous war and the continuous looting of America's wealth and hollowing out of the American middle class.

With both parties and their representatives in Congress beholden to campaign donors whose profits are threatened by Trump's America-first initiatives, is it no wonder that both Democrats and Never-Trump Republicans, all Globalist-Socialist, are determined to bring this President down? Most of the mass media is controlled by these same global corporations. After all, doesn't Amazon's Jeff Bezos—the richest man in the world – own the Washington Post?

As was said in Watergate, just follow the money. And --while you're following the money—see if it leads to a $500 million left-wing slush fund run by a shadowy Soros and Clinton-linked group called Arabella Advisors which is funding the anti-Trump political agenda through dozens of high-sounding front groups.

Folks, the New World Order gang is in full retreat all over the globe. From Brexit in the UK to the populist governments of Hungary and Poland to the Yellow Vest movement in France and Salvini in Italy, the middle and working classes are demanding the overthrow of their nation-destroying overlords.

The overlords who have flooded their countries with unassimilable immigrants from North Africa and surrendered their sovereignty to the European Union and its unaccountable bureaucrats in Brussels. They have lived the unfulfilled promises of the globalists, that giving up national sovereignty and relocating jobs abroad would usher in a new era of peace and prosperity. The exact opposite has happened. The globalist vision has resulted in $7 trillion of pointless wars in the Middle East, an immigration crisis, the loss of jobs, and declining standards of living.

In the United States, Donald J. Trump has emerged as the New World Order's most tenacious and determined foe as he fights the good fight for the American people, our constitutional rights and liberties and the sovereignty of our nation. He is an existential threat to the New World Order . Unlike other Republican presidents of the recent past, he can't be bought and has no price. Unlike them, he doesn't give in and he doesn't give up.

Go ahead, globalists. Try your impeachment games. Try your Senate trials. It won't work. In fact, it will backfire on all of you as—after three years of trying to prevent the Electoral College from voting for Trump, stopping the inauguration, unleashing Jim Comey and the FBI, CIA spying, Robert Mueller and his phony Russiagate probe, tax returns, emoluments, Kavanaugh, and all the rest -- the patience of the American public is wearing thin. We aren't as stupid as you think.

Something you will recognize clearly come November 3, 2020.

Chapter 2 The “Trump Hate” Questionnaire

This chapter works up to and concludes with the “Trump Hate” Questionnaire. We’ll get there I promise. .

Like me, most of my better friends think very highly of Donald J. Trump, regardless of the spew from the concocted venom of the daily soap opera that the corrupt media dishes out each day. This vile stew has been brewed each and every day—ever since Trump came down the escalator. It intensified when Trump was nominated and again when he was elected President. All along the Democrats plan has been to stop the Trump presidency from ever happening and as an insurance policy there were plans to get rid of him if he were elected. Those plans keep being modified as one plan fails and the objective is not accomplished. Right now it is Operation Impeachment.

They intend to get rid of him however whichever way they can and they are not above lying about it. After all, Adam Schiff himself tried to impeach the president for no valid reason twice -Russia Hoax & Mueller Report then obstruction, promising he had the goods even before the current third try with the leaky non-whistleblower Obama holdover whistleblower scam.

What a neat idea the Democrats have created to stay in power forever. Though in practice all the hate still can't make their plots work, they can create a lot of doubt since the corrupt media has taken sides. Can you see the future? Each time a Republican is "wrongly elected" as president, the Dems get to kick him out of office for no real reason. Cool—if you hate the Constitution.

Let me see—if this actually works, then, when Republicans have the House and a Democrat is elected president, the Republicans can get rid of her or him the same way and if it does not work at first, like the Russia Hoax, or Mueller Probe, just go right to impeachment and make it all up. Perfect! Impeach the new Dem president and that's that—simple. Maybe we will never have a president ever again under this system? Possible?

Of course, impeachments will have their consequences. After a while, with nobody being able to serve a term as president because the opposition is empowered to get rid of them by hook or by crook, there is no reason to have a president. Why have a president at all?

Adam Schiff will get the bright idea to recommend an amendment to the Constitution to remove "President" as a valid office from Trump onward, as the public will tire of the game of musical presidents with nobody sitting in a clean chair for any length of time. Yes it is absurd. But, that's what we've got now.

Right now, we do not know what is going to happen with Democrats controlling the House. But we do know it is not good that one party's sole mission is to remove the other party's fairly elected president. What happens next? We saw the most recent House vote featuring all but two Democrats outvoting all Republicans. All Republicans voted against the resolution for impeachment rules.

The Dem majority passed the rules for impeachment and got zero votes from Republicans. These rules as everybody knows except those that watch fake news, give the lying and corrupt Adam Schiff almost dictatorial power over the proceedings. How's that for "fair," folks? Then again hate requires no fairness. It just needs more and more hate.

Even if the impeachment is unsuccessful, and Trump remains in office (the most likely outcome this time), the American public can expect, due to corrupt media and far-left pressure, that in the name of Democrats, the rats will come up with continual blockbuster gotchas, which they claim are high crimes and misdemeanors. Their MO is to keep at it because they are certain that they will stumble upon a ploy that will bring Trump down—their goal.

But really all they will accomplish is to take time from the important business of running the country by elected officials and keep the opposition parties hating each other ad infinitum. But, then again folks, that is what the Hate Game looks like.

We can all count on lots more venom for the next five years no matter what happens this year. In their model impeachment triumph, they recall that the Dems got Nixon in his second term after a landslide victory. They have been ready to get Trump ever since he was nominated.. Why? Maybe they do not even know why. Just tonight, a good Catholic Friend of mine said unequivocally why he hates Trump. The more guys like this that the Democrats unearth, the likelier some of their claptrap will stick.

Here is what he said. He is a regular guy in his seventies whose dad told him years ago to never trust a Republican. He still remembers the lesson. He also knows I like Trump and he chose to tell me why he hates Trump he sent a preview note saying basically that he unapologetically hates Trump:

"What I do know and have seen about this person is enough for me. He is not a person who I could ever like for his views and thoughts and the way he speaks of others. He has a very black soul and is a cancer. You can like him but not me. He has no good qualities as a human being and it is a disgrace when he calls those of his own party HUMAN SCUM."

Dear readers, you don't know who this person is and it's ok that you never will know because he did not authorize my printing this. However, I set him off for sure with a question that I asked. I know he is a good man like a lot of misguided CNN liberal progressives; but he is irreconcilably convinced that Trump is bad. His hate is incurable—at least with today's medicine.

My only sense of why comes from other members of his family, conservatives, who do their own thinking. They tell me that when they visit him on the other side of the country, they must watch CNN until evening entertainment programs come on the TV. My neighbor once told me if the host goes to the rest room, they have at times snuck FOX on the TV; but when the host returns, he says nothing and puts CNN back on like as if nothing had happened. CNN and the Democrats actually control a lot of thought in America like this poor soul. Why? IMHO it is because many Americans cannot believe their favorite news source is non-factual (fake and corrupt).

Democrats major goal this session of Congress is not to work for the people. Instead, they intend all their efforts to be to get Trump out of office. That is the new leftist call to duty. It isn't going to end ever until the left is completely defeated by reasonable Americans.

I can't trust the person in the above email—though I love him as a human being, and I knew him before the 2016 election—to do the right thing for America. We the people who have the better perspective must ask our good friends to turn off CNN, MSNBC and other garbage networks and stop reading the NY Times and the WAPO. These sources spread the hate. Don't expect to have luck, I have tried for years to affect my friend to no avail. He clearly hates Trump because CNN said he should.

Our brethren, propagandized by the corrupt US media will work hard to defeat our America. Please call for the defeat of the left as you encourage your congressional candidates to represent we the people. Corrupt politicians who chose not to follow the Constitution will bring more venom spreading and good people will be infected. CNN, et al will endorse their vile spew as if it is good for the country. It is, as we know, good for nothing but the left's survival.

Last night I heard that six nights ago at a YG concert, the rapper found a guy not singing F Trump and brought him on stage for a ride through the verbal gauntlet. The left is not at all tolerant. Here's how that went down:

On the last Saturday night in October, the Compton rap star YG was performing at Mala Luna, a rap-focused festival in San Antonio. During his set, YG brought a fan onstage, a young white man who never gave his name. Speaking to the fan onstage, YG tried to get him to say, "f__k Donald Trump" in front of everyone. The fan refused, so YG kicked him offstage and, maybe, out of the festival.

In video of that moment, YG pulls the young man onstage and the young man, clearly excited to be up there, as he was a YG fan until then, reaches out to dap YG. YG goes through with the handshake but says, "I don't know if I want to shake your hand here. I don't know."

YG then tells the fan, "Listen, I spotted you out in the crowd. I asked you if you f__k with Donald Trump. You said you don't know. So since you don't know, I need you to make up your mind tonight. I need you to say your name. I need you to state your name because I know your mama, your daddy, your grandmama, your granddaddy's watching. I want you to state your name and yell out, 'F__k Donald Trump.'" The young man shakes his head no.

YG then says: "Get his ass out of here! Get him offstage! F__k [something]! He a Donald Trump supporter!" The crowd boos. There are videos of this. Amazing the nice people who have captive audiences. Congratulations to the young man for not allowing himself to be bullied while out for a supposed fun evening at a concert. The left hate, hate, hate, and then hate again.

I do have another subset of friends and they have subsets also who are so hateful of the President that they argue after a few beers that Donald J. Trump is so, so bad, maybe he is the only person, living or dead, ever to whom God will withhold his redemption. I am not kidding.

In other words, no matter what Trump does for the rest of his life from his last egregious sin, such as the Billy Bush incident, according to this group, he is doomed to the everlasting fire. Case closed. That's tough medicine for sure. But, then again there is the Bible reading from Chapter Three that I recommend as a way of explaining this. It refutes it and adds a lesson. Check out Chapter 3. It's coming up soon.

Read the writings of the left today and you will find that mass murderers—Hitler and Mao, and sex opportunists, such as former presidents Bill Clinton, Warren Harding and even the beloved JFK, are not denied a shot at an eternal reward—instead of eternal damnation. It is tough to believe the overt Trump-haters really mean for Trump to pay such a heavy toll for his offenses. I am glad none of them will be sitting on the panel when the final judgment is pronounced. What offenses? Funny how that questions always stumps Trump's critics.

Hate causes real bad guys to be ignored

Ironically, there is one really bad guy in leftist history and ironically he was born just over seventy years ago. You guessed it--it's Donald Trump. Nobody in leftist history is deemed to be as bad as Trump. Nobody ever gets compared to Trump. Amazing!

Can it be an oversight or is it a lack of historical knowledge on the part of the Trump accusers. I have an old-time villain too who can be saved simply because he is not Trump. By omission, he gets a chance at redemption. Trump—no way. However, Attila the Hun—yes, he has a chance at life eternal in paradise.

How is that? “He is not nor was he ever Trump.” Who knows who Attila the Hun is anyway. Most of us have no idea.

Today, we would have to be studying Roman History to get a glimpse at what a terrible savage he was. But Trump, according to today's Never-Trumpers, and members of the far-left, is worse. Can this really be or is it simply the power of hate?

Though we know little about him as a rule, we all have heard the name of Attila the Hun. It is synonymous with cruelty and barbarity. Most people know nothing about him other than that he was a “bad dude” of the greatest proportion.

He was one of, though certainly the most infamous, of the pagan, barbarian enemies of the late Roman Empire. He was known as the “Scourge of God.” Heck, even Trump is not referred to as “The Scourge of God.” Yet Attila gets redemption and Trump gets none. No salvation for Trump? Humph! Fair? No! The left does not have to be fair; they believe they won the game.

I wrestled with the notion of putting the facts exactly about “why they all hate Trump” down in print. But, most leftists do not really know why they hate the president themselves other than the stuff they hear on CNN. So, it would not be as easy in practice as it is in speculation.

I wrestled with how to figure out how to get Trump haters to fill out the answers to a questionnaire I built of things I would like to know and I bet you too would like to know.

I was troubled about how I could best capture specifically the facts about what Trump haters would say about the man they love to hate. In private conversations, many of these people tell me their negative opinions daily but I do not write them down.

I asked if they would answer my questionnaire to give me their opinion as to why they profusely hate Trump. They agreed to write down their responses and their opinions. I hoped for their valid input about why they hated Trump so much that they would admit it publicly.

I persisted with them so I could use their responses in this chapter. My plan was to tell my friends and others about this book and that I needed their opinions. I would agree ahead of time, for Trump-haters to take their shot at Trump in a published forum—this book.

I promised I would not alter a word that they might write. I was assured by enough of them that they would tell me why they hated Donald Trump. Yet, when the time came, they did not choose to deliver anything--even after reminders. No reply.

They did not do what they promised me so I have nothing from the other side (the hate-Trump side) other than some simple innocuous emails that I show you below. I found them in my email archives and though they are not really very caustic like the ones I thought I would get from the questionnaire, I found these few items below that did come from people I know who do, in fact, hate Trump as much as any that I know.

I put random labels on top of their comments. There are just three as that's all I had--but you will at least get the idea.

JD

Response to a Bernie Sanders income email was "Wonder how much that person in the WH gave to charity. Why don't you open up a go fund me site for yourself."

All Trump loves is himself and could care less about you. You are too naive to see that.

BL

"Come on. The World's biggest immoral cheater crook never truthful and most importantly Coward. Five times coward and daily coward. My father spent nearly four years in WWII and for him and everyone else who has served I would love to beat the hell out of him."

MiRa

"Hi Brian, "Brilliant writer that you are perhaps you can send a letter to King Donald and explain what the Constitution says so that even the smartest King in whole world can understand it. To investigate... He is not above the law of the land, and Congress has the right to investigate the President."

--- End of examples---

No love there folks, for sure but like me, you have witnessed a lot more hate than these.

Those who agreed to answer a questionnaire, shown on the next page, did not supply anything. I think they feared the publicity.

Here is what I had asked for.

Many, who chose not to respond were among those who had told me originally that they absolutely hated the President. Nothing came from them. So though they had agreed, not one answer came from them to the questionnaire I show below:

Questionnaire: My specific request to the Trump Haters

I sent the following text to those who had agreed to participate.

Dear Friends and those in receipt of this email.

In a chapter 1 of a book I am writing titled, Trump Hate, I hope to include credited or uncredited paragraphs written by a number of my friends or others who absolutely hate the current president. You are receiving this email because you have indicated your hate for Trump and your willingness to participate. Thus, I am asking you for your input for the book

Everybody has an opinion.

What I would like to know, aka the questionnaire, is described in the following 13 questions:

1. Who first told you Trump was evil and bad?
2. What news media is your chief source of Trump input?
3. Do you also hate Rush Limbaugh?
4. Do you think that impeachment is the only way to solve the "problem" with Trump? Why?
5. Would it be OK if the Republicans initiated impeachment immediately on the day the next Democrat president is elected? Like the Democrats, would it be OK if the Republicans made up stuff to fill in the blanks-- or should they tell the truth.

6. Should impeachment hearings be open to the public like Nixon and Clinton or should they be behind closed doors?
7. Is Adam Schiff telling the truth about Trump and the Ukraine?
8. Knowing that Trump is a billionaire, would you think he might have been tempted about the opposite sex more than most Americans?
9. Do you think Trump loves or hates God. Why?
10. Do you think the Democrats are honest when they speak about Trump?
11. If Trump found out that the cure for cancer had already been discovered and he forced medical authorities to begin saving people with the solution, would that change your opinion of him? Why / Why not?
12. Do you think the media helps the people understand Donald Trump as president by telling the truth or do they simply look for stories that they can spin to hurt the president's standing with the people?
- 13 Are there any important notions about the President you would like to add.

Please provide factual examples wherever possible and refrain from vulgarities.

What happens next:

The plan for the questionnaire is to have five to ten individuals who do not like Trump (that's why you have been selected) and believe he is bad for America to offer their thoughts on the subject in a chapter of the book. I would like you to submit your paragraph or a page or several pages and tell me if I can quote you by using your signature.

I have written 217 books so far and I can guarantee you will be in this new book if you offer your comments and you give me permission to print your submission. You can also write a paragraph and withhold a signature. Or you can use a nickname or initial so that you can identify "your stuff" when and if you show the book to your family at Christmas time.

If you like Trump but have friends that don't and they would like to be in this book, they are welcome also. I will print as many submissions as I can. I will not annotate any—even those that are the most damning to my own personal thinking about the President.

Thank you.
End-of-email

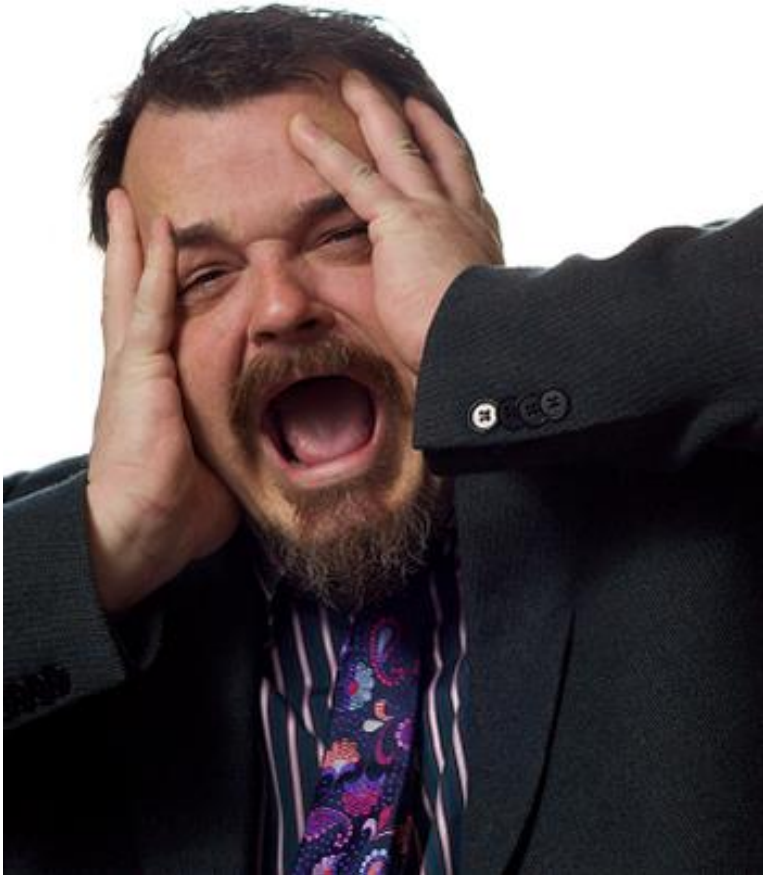

Summation: The lack of courage from the far left or those who seemingly represent the far left to their friends was very telling. I was surprised for how much these windbags made it seem they would take any avenue to say how rotten Trump is. Yet they were quiet when they knew that their comments would be attributed to them and not the generic world of Trump haters.

I will end this chapter with this very brief introduction to an article by Josh Kantrow from American Thinker October 2019. I was disappointed that I had not amassed enough from Trump-hating submitters to fill a full chapter but that does not mean their venom is not on display throughout public places in America. Josh Kantrow has some friends who sound like mine and he talks about them like I hoped to talk about mine. So I hope you enjoy his short piece that begins in Chapter 3.

Chapter 3 Do Trump Haters Have a Life?

Trump Hater—Who would know?

Is there life among the Trump-haters

This comes from American Thinker

By Josh Kantrow October 7, 2019

My anti-Trump friends have truly lost it. I guess because I'm one of the few Republicans they really interact with, and perhaps because I've done a lot of media appearances lately, they are taking it out on me. Big time.

Their bile comes in all forms — nasty text messages, emails, and tagging me on their Facebook pages to try to generate traffic for themselves and get me to waste hours of my life arguing with their deranged Trump-hater friends (most of whom hate all Republicans). I have ignored them.

Perhaps my favorite screed is this: "Until you get on the right side of history, I'm gonna need to re-evaluate our friendship. (Proving the old adage that no good deed goes unpunished, I helped this "friend" find a job after he was out of work for six months.)

Or this one, from a true limousine liberal who is constantly screaming "Unity!" from the comfort of his lily-white suburb, where he moved when it was time to put his kids in school: "You are a disgrace. Hillary was right about you and your fellow Trump supporters."

Look, I'll be the first to admit I was not happy (with good reason) that Obama was president, but I never stooped to one tenth of the level of obsession and hatred these folks have. I'm lucky to have a full life, with many hobbies and interests that don't involve politics, and wonderful family and friends.

These folks need to get a life. The last time I checked, the United States is experiencing unprecedented peace and prosperity, and Trump hasn't gotten us into any unnecessary wars, signed any stupid deals that hand over billions to a terrorist state that it uses to threaten our allies, or drawn any red lines in the sand that he failed to enforce. Further, he hasn't spent eight years taunting those of us who have worked hard to get where we are that we "didn't build that." Nor has he tried to redistribute our hard-earned money.

So if these Trump-haters think their texts, emails, and tagging are going to get me to stop speaking out on radio, TV, American Thinker, the Chicago Tribune, other outlets, they are dead wrong.

Josh Kantrow is a Republican and pro-Israel activist and a cyber-security lawyer in Chicago.

Chapter 4 A Very Brief Primer on Hate

Picking on Trump today seems cool? Really?

In his seventies today, Donald Trump is easy to pick on but in his youth, he was bigger and stronger than most men and so they might call him a jerk behind his back, which a lot of men do today. But, if they thought they'd ever have to face him outside a bar for those words, they'd think twice about it. Donald Trump never had to fear his manhood and he took no crap from anybody and just like most men who claim to be men, he still does not take any crap, no matter what the mainstream media, aka, the drive-by media think about it. What a treat to have such a man as our president. Would you rather a wuss such as Barack Obama or worse than him, Mitt Romney.

Why? Because the detractors are wimps and cowards and Trump is still a big and powerful man. At 70-something he is not inclined to want to show it but a takedown of Trump would require a lot of wimps. It would be like an attack on the Giant by the Lilliputians.

Think about it. folks. I'd buy tickets and take bets on the long promised Biden v Trump match out by the proverbial woodshed. How about you?

It is too bad that a dishonest and corrupt fourth estate (the drive-by media) reports the news in 2019 or we all might have some truth to read.

How about this editorial never published:

“Just as the kind and gentle Barack H Obama took out Osama Bin Laden when he was “commander in chief,” so also did Donald Trump take out Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi. “

The press could have written that but it was not helpful to their takeout plans for President Donald Trump.

--Never published--

Obama could have congratulated Trump on his success just as Trump congratulated Obama but giving praise to Trump was not permitted and Obama is not strong enough to say that it is as it is.

However, Trump gave Obama his due as president, while the press has decided to call al-Baghdadi a great scholar, like as if he never killed Americans.

Here is the statement of Trump congratulating:

I want to personally congratulate President Obama and the men and women of the Armed Forces for a job well done.

The press praised Baghdaddi in ways they would not praise most Americans with the proper credentials. The WAPO did not care that few think the dead terrorist matches their memorialized description. I found no press report about Obama congratulating Trump on his takedown of al Baghdaddi.

As hard as it is for Amricans to believe about a US-owned newspaper paper, the one and only Washington Post (WAPO) published this obituary headline after searching to find the proper words that would not upset the ISIS world. Many in the US who are for the good of the US and not the Middle East could not understand why WAPO chose to honor a terrorist when great American soldiers just had cornered this scum and the tracking dog was hurt while capturing this coward by running after him in a tunnel?

al-Baghdadi was responsible for many American and others suffering brutal beheadings and—let’s call them regular brutal deaths. WAPO could not stomach giving credit to those brave Americans who risked their lives to capture this bad guy but they did choose to praise the thug who placed many notes to terrorists to kill Americans inside suicide vests. Baghdaddi was killed by pulling the string on his own vest which also took out the coward’s family, who were fleeing with him in the tunnel. He knew his children would die but he pulled the string anyway. That’s why Trump called him a big wimpering coward.

It would be nice for American papers to honor Americans in their work and give no glory to the bad guys. .

Nonetheless, here is the WAPO obituary text.

“Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, austere religious scholar at helm of Islamic State, dies at 48,”

Should we put a contingent together to attend his wake?
Whoops...he has already been buried at sea.

Perhaps it is now clear why it is tough to trust the perspectives of today’s hateful anti-Trump press when this terrorist is elevated and the president is mocked.

See the next page for a random note sent by somebody with a perspective on the bait and switch tactics that the Trump team used to snag Al Baghdadi

Listen up because it isn't that hard.

What you just witnessed is one of the most masterful bait and switches in military history. Publishing the whole "abandonment of the Kurds" was a ruse (that you fell for) in order to to flush ISIS out.

Oh no Turkey moves in! Oh no some ISIS guys get free! Oh no some of those ISIS guys were tagged with location devices and went back to their HQ! Oh BANG! Dead ISIS Leader.

Stop assuming that the orange cheeto is stupid.

The man with no face has the Trump Hate answer—More Trump Hate!

The below email was submitted to TribLive by Robert Jalphabet (my alias for him), specifically to the Tribune-Review as a Letter to the editor titled Trump 'hate' is justified on Wednesday, March 6, 2019 at 10:00 a.m. Here it comes. Hold your nose.

Let's be clear about the emotion of hate. Some letter-writers are aghast at the degree of hatred that has been directed at Donald Trump and his presidency. Here are two questions for their consideration.

1. From our earliest years, are we not taught to hate mendacity, fraud, arrogance, narcissism, rudeness, crudity, lewdness, bullying and bigotry?

[not exactly but within circumstances perhaps]

2. When these “abstractions” are personified, i.e., exhibited in the behavior of a person, is it not understandable that a hate reaction is warranted and likely to occur?

Our nation is suffering a great wound. And before healing can begin, the wound must be cauterized. Trump personifies and demonstrates in his life and his presidency all the listed elements that provoke the hate reaction. It’s as if our country has unwittingly shot itself in the foot by electing him.

Fortunately, most Americans recognize that the wound is not fatal. We have elections. And our fondest hope is that a candidate will emerge with the right message, broad popular appeal and strength to counter the vituperation Trump is a master at discharging — a candidate who loves truth and truth-telling and exhibits humility, grace, selflessness and manners.

It takes a powerful stimulus to release a powerful emotion like hate. But hate is a justifiable reaction against a target deserving of it. One need not apologize for harboring or expressing it, much less cower under the opprobrium that the self-righteous tend to apply to it.

Comment: great gibberish finish!

Dear Robert Jalphabet,

You and I disagree, period. Without trying to offend anybody, I would label you simply as a pompous a- - -. At first, what you have written seems like nice logic but more than anything, your explanation begged the argument and only a person who was already inclined to agree with you before reading your little piece, would be convinced of your logic-devoid assertions after reading it.

If you were a hedonist (the doctrine that pleasure or happiness is the sole or chief good in life), and maybe you are, and your readers were hedonists, you'd would have a better shot with this convoluted logic.

You chose not to substantiate your premises enough to use them as the basis for any conclusion other than that you have a big OPINION.

You might even agree that hate is one of those things that borders on the negative side of religion and the notion of God. So, instead of trying to use convoluted logic to answer this question about the OK-ness of hate regarding Trump, why not consult an authority on religion?

<https://www.gotquestions.org/Bible-hate.html>

Question: What does the Bible say about hate?

Answer: Biblically speaking, there are positive and negative aspects to hatred. It is acceptable to hate those things that God hates; indeed, this is very much a proof of a right standing with God. "Let those who love the Lord hate evil" (Psalm 97:10a). Indeed, the closer our walk with the Lord and the more we fellowship with Him, the more conscious we will be of sin, both within and without.

Do we not grieve and burn with anger when God's name is maligned, when we see spiritual hypocrisy, when we see blatant unbelief and godless behavior? The more we understand God's attributes and love His character, the more we will be like Him and the more we will hate those things that are contrary to His Word and nature.

However, the hatred that is negative surely has to be that which is directed against others. The Lord mentions hatred in the Sermon on the Mount: “But I tell you that anyone who is angry with his brother will be subject to judgment” (Matthew 5:22). The Lord commands that not only should we be reconciled with our brother before we go before the Lord, but also that we do it quickly (Matthew 5:23-26).

The act of murder itself was certainly condemned, but hatred is a “heart” sin, and any hateful thought or act is an act of murder in God’s eyes for which justice will be demanded, possibly not in this life but at the judgment. So heinous is the position of hate before God that a man who hates is said to be walking in darkness, as opposed to the light (1 John 2:9, 11).

The worst situation is that of a man who continues professing religion but remains at enmity with his brother. The Scriptures declare that such a person is a liar (1 John 4:20), and he may fool men, but not God. How many believers live for years pretending that all is well, putting on a front, only to be found finally wanting because they have harbored enmity (hatred) against a fellow believer?

Hatred is a poison that destroys us from within, producing bitterness that eats away at our hearts and minds. This is why the Scriptures tell us not to let a “root of bitterness” spring up in our hearts (Hebrews 12:15). Hatred also destroys the personal witness of a Christian because it removes him from fellowship with the Lord and other believers. Let us be careful to do as the Lord advised and keep short accounts with everyone about everything, no matter how small, and the Lord will be faithful to forgive, as He has promised (1 John 1:9; 2:1).

So, Robert, if you are a hedonist, or an atheist, hating can be your thing. But, if you are a loving person and a good Christian, your advice cannot be accepted as universal by those weak at heart.

Best wishes in life, and I hope you have not led too many astray with your response that basically says hate is OK. It is not OK. . Perhaps you would agree that there is already too much hate in the world to suggest it is OK to bring about more hate. Are you OK with hating your neighbor if you can justify it? Think about that Robert before you offer advice the next time. Please do not publish your neighbor's name simply because he deserves it.

Please remember that the Bible says in its own words: Even he who you may try not to hate, who is made by God, is your brother. We must love our brothers even if they are not in our very own family. Even if their name happens to be Donald J. Trump, and he happens to be president of the USA.

Chapter 5 Growing Up Trump

Aren't they cute?

Trump haters hate Trump

You know who they are. They make sure you say it is OK to not talk politics. Then, when you think you are enjoying a beer with them, and not talking politics, they whack you with something they think is a Trump gotcha of gotchas—so bad a thing they know about Trump that you could not have considered it while you were enjoying your shot and beer. Nonetheless, wham! You have been liberal-bombed. It is a new term for when you're enjoying life at the request of a no-politics guy, and yet, you get pummeled by a pile of verbal crap heaved by the same liberal Trump hater.

It is a dishonest leftist hit for sure but then again, the Dem hits of today all reek of the stench of dishonesty and a pinch of corruption and a dash of just being bad guys.

Now, these President Trump supporters really are enjoying themselves

Donald Trump's early years

I respect Donald Trump. I don't just like him, I think he is a special guy. God made him for a special mission. He was not necessarily the best teenager or young adult, but he did not run for President in his teens or twenties, either. How many of us would pass the "good guy" test before we matured?

Trump always had more than anybody else so we might suggest he had a tougher time being normal than normal people. He always had more money than anybody else. He was taller. He was better looking. He was smarter. In life, in many ways, Donald Trump was better in many ways than most. And, yes he learned it and yes, he knew it. Some people who hate him, resent him simply because he grew up rich. They need no other reasons.

As such, he was not the best behaved guy all the time. He admits to that. Nor was he as bad as his critics say. He was not the only one but with his family money, he had many opportunities to get into drugs and booze. Yet, he is clean of drugs and does not use alcohol. There is a lot to admire about clean living Donald Trump.

He had four siblings. It was easier in life for all of them, though dad, Fred Trump did always try to rein them in. Trump was not obsessed with all he had. He did not give it a thought. It was just how it was.

The Kellys were not the Trumps

Donald Trump was not like me nor were his friends. Looking back, I could have been called a model teenager, though I know inside I was a rascal always looking for a way to get one of my homemade jokes on the floor. After eight years of parochial school in a class just over 30 in number, it was a lot easier for me in the public school. By the way in my class of 30, there were not many girls and besides ,in grade school, I was always a chubby guy and I knew it. I liked baseball and football a lot more than girls but in retrospect, perhaps I had no choice. By the end of grade school, I began to stretch out a bit.

A Meyers High School, I never saw so many girls in one place at that point of my life. I noticed. They were all very pretty. In these younger days, I viewed girls as being sugar and spice and everything nice. No female had to worry about me. My dad never took me aside for the birds and bees talk. I did not need one. I was a junior in high school before any female noticed me. She picked me as her chem lab partner. And, I thought it was because I was a good student.

One way or another I was taught to be a gentleman. I had to work hard for every penny I got as a teenager and all through life. Think about what a fine man my dad was. He and my mother were far different than those today who find a place and live together before they get married. I make no judgments here...just telling this little story below to make a point.

My father and mother were in love. It was the depression. They had no money. My dad lived in Parsons and mom lived in the Rolling Mill Hill Section of Wilkes-Barre—a distance of 3.5 miles. They saw each other a few times a week and fell in love. Most of the time, my father walked to where they would meet. He had no car nor could he afford one. They first met at Arlene's—a block from my mother's home and that was their rendezvous spot.

They got married after a long informal courtship. Because at 26 years old in the depression, they could not afford marriage, they never told their parents. They continued to live in their family homes—not together—for six months before my father told my grandfather on my mother's side and eventually, he won the right to live at my mother's house. There was a lot of love there.

Dad got a job at the Stegmaer Brewery and they had a great life. They had five kids and we all had a great life. In a three bedroom home, with one bathroom. with grand mom and grandpop McKeown living with us, the nine of us went upstairs every night to sleep.

As the son of a millionaire, tall, and handsome, Trump knew of a world most of us did not know and never would know. Until he was twelve, he had it all. The way I see it, it was the norm for him. He figured it was what it was.

Trump, who is about my age. did not have folks like me as his best friends. My dad and families like ours did not have the resources to send children to private schools. We probably were unaware of the fact that the very rich lived like that. I never recall it being discussed. Trump and his friends all had a few extra bucks. He had whatever he wanted for most of his life. He had more money when he needed it than I could ever dream of.

I don't mean he did not have to be clever to make a few extra bucks as he grew up. For example, like me, my brothers, and sisters, he found soda bottles or asked neighbors for them, and he took them to the store for a nickel deposit each. Like me, he also had a paper route. The difference between us on the paper route was that when it was blizzarding and below zero, I traipsed a block from the bundle drop-off to my house at 5:00 AM, warmed up and folded all my papers. Then I went off walking very briskly in the middle of the road.

Trump picked up his paper bundle up from the family limousine which then took him to all his spots and kept him warm all the while. Not sure if the president had any other jobs as a kid. I had quite a few other jobs until at 17, I graduated from high school. I had the better option here as I did not have to leave home and move to a military school to finish high school. I lived at home four more years after high school when I attended and graduated from King's College, which was in my home town.

I delivered papers 'til I was 17 and along the way, I earned high school money as a pinboy, a soda delivery boy, a 5& 10 store boy-Friday. I sold ice cream cakes, made corsages and sold them, shoveled sidewalks, cut grass, picked cherries, and did just about anything to get a buck. But, I could not have done any of that if I were sent to military school.

I needed cash so that at 15 years old in my junior year, I was able to go on a nice date with my high school sweetheart. She was a very nice young lady and she was very sweet. For most of my years from 15 to 19, (my first two years of college) it was the same young lady. I know Trump was seen in the company of beautiful young women when he was at military school but I do not know much more than that.

My dad had a unique concern for Hollywood male stars who clearly had a different life than most normal people with all the beautiful women in Hollywood. Perhaps Trump had some of the same advantages. When dad and I would have a beer when I was in my twenties, and even before that, we talked about things. He often said to me about the handsome men in Hollywood and all their temptations —BTW, my father was a very handsome man.

My dad said that he was glad that he was not burdened by the temptations of the Hollywood actors. That just about nets it out. Donald Trump almost his whole life was burdened by those temptations – both the good parts and the bad parts that my dad was worried about. Without such temptations, good men have an easier time continuing to be good men and ending life with an eternal reward. Yes, I mean going to heaven.

My father liked being himself. He was a good man. He was not looking to be anybody but Edward J. Kelly. If he had been a movie star and the ladies longed for him and came after him, his life would have been much more complicated. But, he did not have to face such temptation. He was glad he did not have to endure the temptation to not to be a good man. My father was a religious man and wanted his behavior in life to assure him a place with God for eternity. I am sure my dad would recommend forgiveness for Trump for any and all the president's transgressions.

Growing up in my family, we were nowhere close to rich but most of my life, I know we never thought we were poor. God was good to us for sure, though our digs were never in fashion magazines. We were all OK with what we had. My dad worked hard to give it to us. What we had was all we needed—just barely.

When I look back, no matter when—during the growing up period—when I was in grade school or high school, the only conclusion a thinking individual could reach was that the Kelly family was definitely poor. We may not have been aware of it; but we were poor.

Tough growing up Trump

I think overall that Donald J. Trump had it tougher than I while growing up. I had a tough time as a 21-year old, handling Army Basic Training—living in the barracks with guys cleaning floors with tooth brushes. The thoughts of years like that would be intolerable. Army 8-weeks of basic training was more than enough.

I would suggest that is why the President is so tough today. Adversity makes a person strong. Winning through adversity is especially heartening and can teach a person never to give up. That's the Trump I think I know. I'd love to meet him.

Despite not having a ton of money or expensive possessions, the Kellys were rich in spirit and we Kelly-boys had a great dad to emulate and a wonderful mother to adore. Not everybody has such good fortune as the Trump family or the Kelly family. Donald Trump's dad Fred loved him for sure as did his mom, Mary. However, the young Trump's strong will, even as an adolescent, was not something, it seems, that his dad could handle well all the time.

Fred Trump gave his son tough, strict rules to live by. My dad and most dad's also give their kids good rules or there would be no order in a family. Young Trump's rules, because he had so many more things in his life, were intended to rein in the propensity rich kids have to be excessive. Trump had to have tougher rules to follow than I had. My dad was very trusting after he laid the rules down and for the most part, the Kelly kids, including me did not violate the rules.

I watched my older brother, 5.5 years older than me grow up in front of me and I knew what our dad felt he did wrong. I heard him complaining to our mom about my brother sometimes though I was not supposed to be listening. Nonetheless, I learned to not do those things. I decided to follow the rules at home.

However, young Trump had so many great things "given" to him that he broke family rules and thought it was OK. He felt well assured that he had outfoxed those who were checking on such things. It was not just his dad. As a fox, young Donald believed all of his unauthorized escapades had not been discovered and never would be. But, he was wrong.

For Fred Trump, of course, finding the rascal Trump who would often disobey dad's dictates was another matter. Young Trump, for example would often stray well off the path the rules dictated. For example, he would often violate a major rule by skipping school. Worse than that when he skipped school, often with a buddy, he would use funds that he had to take the train into Manhattan on many an afternoon. Grand Central Station was a favorite Trump target.

He would go mostly after school but also after skipping school well before he was thirteen years of age. He would go with a buddy and the two would buy things that were unavailable in the neighborhoods.

For example Trump and his buddy loved to buy stink bombs and all kinds of “nefarious” adolescent goodies in the stores of the Big Apple. He did not meet with the seedy elements of the City because he did not approve of drugs or alcohol for himself or others. His dad knew nothing about their escapades, which I would call misadventures. Like all dads for the most part, Fred Trump wanted all his children to be the best and to obey rules at all costs.

When his father found out about the unauthorized misadventures, Donald Trump had to spill all the beans and his dad found that his son had been a repeat offender on a number of rules violations.

Fred Trump was beside himself about controlling his errant son. His conclusion was that the only way he could assure that his twelve-year-old “wayward son” would grow up right was to send him off to a military school. He wanted his son to grow up to be a worthwhile human being. Neither I, nor any of my friends ever had to put up with anything like that. Kicked out of the family and off to an out-of-town school—a military school to boot.

I graduated from St. Boniface Grade school when I was thirteen. My dad never knew what I did when he was not home but he trusted me as Fred Trump trusted his son. For several years before I was old enough to graduate, Thomas Allardyce and Tommy Mehm and a bunch of adventurous St. Boniface boys would tag along with me on a six mile bike ride to Sans Souci Park, the back way.

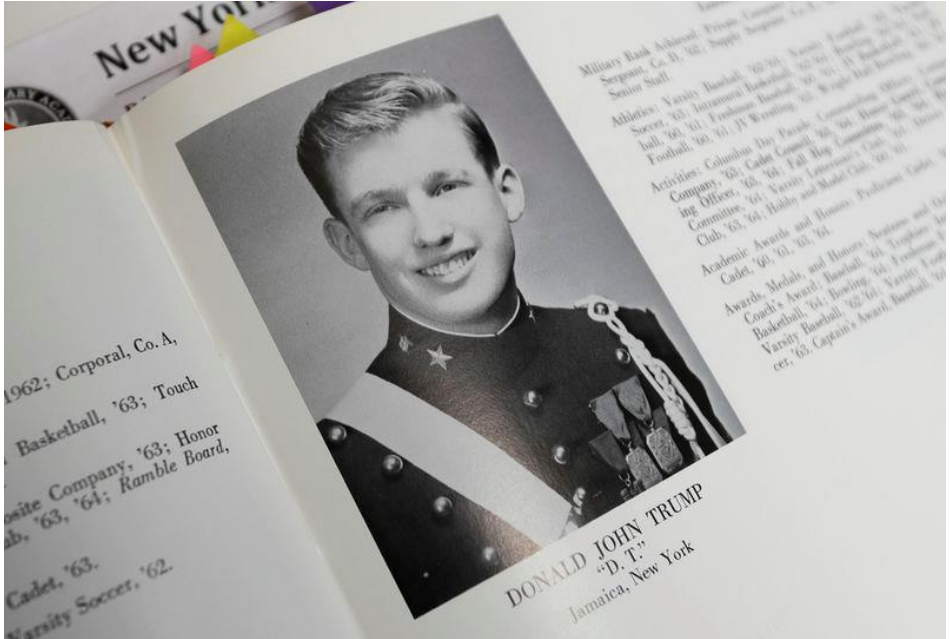

The hills were amazing so much that in one direction (going) or the other (coming back) we would be pushing our 26” bikes up huge back road highways. There was little traffic. I never asked my dad and he never asked me. We always went on the same day each year.

It was always March 19, a day off at St. Boniface known as Father Ward’s Feast Day—because he was named Joseph and that was St. Joseph’s day. From sixth grade to eighth, my co-conspirators and I made the best of it. My dad, I think would have approved but I never asked.

Right or wrong, Trump, the elder did not give Trump the younger the opportunity to snooker him into a less severe consequence for his mishaps. Trump the lesser could not plead his case and nobody was ready to plead it for him. So, he resigned himself to accept his medicine without even a $\frac{1}{4}$ t-spoon of sugar.

After pensive periods, though he loved his son intensely, Fred Trump decided to give up his personal preference to be in his child's company for the probably better life outcome of choosing to send young Donald to a military school. The young Donald was unaware that his dad was feeling such consternation. After all, Trump the younger was not really such a bad-guy, though those victimized by the Manhattan Smoke Bombs would not swear to that.

Chapter 6 Abrupt End of Trump's Early Dream Life

Military School yearbook picture of Donald J. Trump

Many, including me, think that military school in terms of a disciplinary medicine for young Donald Trump was way too-tough. At the time, Trump was just a 12-year-old kid who was not into booze or drugs or stealing. Moreover, he had none of the lifestyles associated at the time with being a reprobate. He was definitely a wise-guy and a rascal however.

Young Trump had no vote in the process and it was not democracy. Fred Trump Sr. ran the show. So, Donald had no hearing. He had to go wherever dad dictated. The dream life of a twelve-year-old in a twenty-three room mansion ended abruptly on that day, and a new, much different and more disciplined life began as Donald J. Trump turned thirteen. It was bad enough that it could make a kid want to stay twelve forever.

Most young boys who might have envied the pre thirteen year old Trump would not have taken on the misery of military school just to stay a Trump. No way!

The President as a young man had a history of being himself in a world that did not necessarily appreciate his nuances. Donald J. Trump for example left what they called an indelible impression in the prosperous Queens neighborhood where he evolved from a mischievous, incorrigible boy into a swaggering young man.

As he grew older, he still knew who he was but he was more intentionally cautious. I suspect he was concerned that when he graduated high school, he would be signed up by his dad into the French Foreign Legion. That did not happen. Even after a stint in the Legion, Trump was always convinced that at some point, he would be joining his father in the business world. And all would be well again. That is what ultimately happened.

As he got older and matured, he held no animus for his father regarding his military school years, as he believed dad had done what dad believed was best. He remembered his father's lessons: "I learned from my father that every penny counts, because before too long your pennies turn into dollars."

Most Americans do not get the chances Donald Trump had in his life because their dads do not have the resources of Fred Trump. Fred Trump Sr. had an estimated net worth of $250 – $300 million at the time of his death at 93 in 1999. This wealth came from his career as a successful businessman. As a real-estate developer, he built thousands of homes and also found considerable success with his own company.

I always felt my dad was very successful also. None of us ever compared ourselves to a potential image of a Trump so it was easy to be OK in our world. My dad, for example, worked for the Stegmaier Brewery until it went out of business when he was just 57 years old. At the time, I thought he was old but he lasted quite a lot longer and the Kelly's were happy about that.

At Stegmaier, dad was well respected and one of just a few who could handle their 600 can per minute flagship canning machine. By the time the Brewery folded, dad had “raised” us all and we all had jobs. I see my dad as having had a nice success in his business life but I know life was not easy for him in giving my siblings and I our great start in life.

The best we got from our father; was the best he could give. We had a warm home, plenty of food, and a lot of love. That’s a lot. We expected nothing else and dad had nothing else to give. None of us went into business for ourselves until after our first careers were long over having worked for various small and large organizations in America.

None of Kelly siblings went to private schools

Whoops, I do have a sister that got a high school scholarship to a private school because she was both smart and holy. Eventually, she came home from this boarding school before she was nineteen. I may write a book about that one day, but my dad, a religious fellow himself often said that we (our family) would all get to heaven on the coat-tails of this wonderful person, my sister, his daughter, and her sacrifices on our behalf, for God.

If I had been admitted with scholarship to a private school, our family resources were so minimal that they could not have helped me if I messed up and was disciplined. Folks like you or I would have been thrown out of any school for just one miscue in the rules. They would relieve themselves of the burden of carrying us financially.

But, because of his unique status in life, a young Trump learned to frolic, game the system, and win the day. The private grade schools did not want to lose Fred Trump’s favor. Trump Sr. would never be informed so the schools made do!

For all his years, Donald’s father, Fred C. Trump’s successes as a real estate developer paid for the private schools, the limousines and the twelve years in the 23-room house to which Donald and his four siblings grew accustomed.

Yet, Donald J. Trump also learned that comfort and security could be fleeting if his grades or his behavior were poor. His dad was tough and not a pushover at all.

The Military School Caper

When Donald was 13, for example, his father had enough of his shenanigans. He was not ready for tolerance. Instead he looked for a solution. When he got wind that something good could happen to both him and his son, he abruptly sent him to a military boarding school that would accept the young Trump named Donald. It did not matter what it would cost the Fred Trump family. The young Donald would have vetoed the deal but he had no say.

In his new life, instructors would strike young Donald if he misbehaved and he eventually had to accept the requirements to exist in this environment. They included daily inspections and strict curfews.

“He was essentially banished from the family home,” said his biographer, Michael D’Antonio. “He hadn’t known anything but living with his family in a luxurious setting, and all of a sudden he’s sent away. That’s a rough way to start out in life.”

“I was a wise guy, and they wanted to get me in line,” Trump explained. “Thinking back, it was a very positive influence.”

For those twelve years up to the year he became too old to play Little League Baseball, Trump definitely had it made. Military school made him change his life style.

Unlike most families in the neighborhood, the Trumps had what those living on High Street would say was a life with everything. The Trumps quietly had a cook, a chauffeur and even an intercom system.

In the early fifties, their color television, a rarity at the time, was among the Trumps' possessions that impressed visitors and friends the most. His massive train set was a close second. Here is a quote from his biography regarding the train:

“He had the most amazing train set,” recalled Golding, a childhood friend who became a lawyer in Portland, Ore. “He had all these special gadgets and gates and switches, more extensive than anything I'd seen. I was very envious.”

I can certainly appreciate that. As a sub-nine year old, I know that I still remember my longing to come up with the $14.95 necessary to buy the Lionel Train Starter Set that was displayed at the American Auto Store. I never did earn enough money to buy it. But, eventually I did get my train—A Marx model. I have no idea how Donald got his Lionel set but I bet it was a special day.

When I got my train as a nine-year-old, it was such a big deal for me in my life that later I memorialized it about five years ago by writing a book about titled: Four Dollars & Sixty-Two Cents. By the way this book still sells on Amazon at <https://www.amazon.com//dp/0998268348>. Trains surely were special in my life. Finally, I found something, a love of trains, which the president and I have in common.

Fred Trump wanted to be a good parent

Most parents want their kids to grow up to be successful but perhaps just as importantly, they want their offspring to become good people. I am sure your folks did and my folks did. Well Trump's folks did also. Fred Trump and his wife forbade their children from bad forms of behavior such as cursing, calling each other names and using nicknames and wearing lipstick, and there were surely a host of other prohibitions.

In his biography there is a story that Fred Trump “was really very kind of tightfisted,” said Peter Brant, a newsprint magnate who was among Donald's closest childhood friends. “He didn't give Donald a whole bunch of rope.”

As an example, he cites that in those years, it seemed that all youngsters yearned for the new mitts with intricate webbing that Rawlings had begun manufacturing. I knew that my dad could afford nothing at the top of the line. In fact, once my dad was assured that my jobs gave me enough money to buy a baseball mitt, that was good-enough, he too felt it was OK to not contribute to a mitt.

Not everybody's dad would fork over what it took to get a new mitt, especially the newest and brightest. So, even though a great mitt was not essential to playing ball, Peter Brant was able to persuade his father to help pay for his $30 glove. Nonetheless Donald Trump, whose dad could buy and sell Peter Brant's father, could not use any argument to persuade Fred Trump to buy him one of these classic, yet expensive mitts.

It was way too expensive, Fred told Donald, though he did agree to buy him a cheaper model so that he did not have to borrow a glove from a friend. If I did not have a paper route, I would not have had a baseball glove so I can relate to the importance for the young Trump, to have a mitt good enough to do the job of playing good baseball.

Some facts from Trump's biographer

Michael D'Antonio was the biographer who wrote "Never Enough: Donald Trump and the Pursuit of Success." His take was that Fred Trump's decision to send his son to military school was "a very severe response to a kid who hadn't gotten arrested and wasn't involved in drinking and drugging. He was essentially a smart aleck." "This was a profound rejection of Donald," he said.

He also wrote about Donald's reaction to military school: . "At the beginning, he didn't like the idea of being told what to do, like make your bed, shine your shoes, brush your teeth, clean the sink, do your homework..."

His mentor at the New York Military Academy was Theodore Dobias. Dobias has offered his take recently about the young Trump and his time in the school: "We really didn't care whether he came from Rockefeller Center or whatever. He was just another name."

Dobias also noted that he could see that Trump had an innate drive for success: "He wanted to be number one. He wanted to be noticed. He wanted to be recognized. And he liked compliments."

When he caught on to how it worked, he learned how to make the best of what to him was a bad situation. Young Trump went from resentful of his surroundings to winning medals for neatness and he took great pride in his grades. Additionally, Trump distinguished himself on both the baseball and football teams.

Ladies' Man: TRUMP

The biographers could not miss the Trump legend at the school. The word was that by his senior year, Trump became known for bringing stylish women to campus and showing them around. “They were beautiful, gorgeous women, dressed out of Saks Fifth Avenue,” recalled one of his classmates, George White.

Jeff Ortenau was a fellow cadet with whom Donald shared some thoughts and visions of life. Ortenau notes that by the time he hit eighteen, Donald Trump had a “clear sense of his own destiny, a vision he shared.”

“I’m going to be very famous one day,” Donald promised.

“You know what?” Ortenau recalls telling Trump. “You’re probably going to be president.”

Chapter 7 Military School--Trump Won by Playing by the Rules

The adolescent Trump learned to beat the game

On November 10, 2015, a lady wrote about Trump at 5:00 AM ET. Her name is Ailsa Hang. On the left is a picture of the author.

The below story is courtesy of NYMA. It is a part of NPR's series "Journey Home." In this story, the authors go to the places presidential candidates call home and they find what those places tell us about how the candidate sees the world. Here is the story:

Donald Trump's freewheeling, off-the-cuff campaign style can sometimes make him look like he's winging it. Playing by the rules is not what the billionaire presidential candidate has ever been known for. But, there was a time when he learned that playing by the rules was more helpful than being a rascal.

There was this little-known time in his childhood — military school. Today's president learned well that playing the game meant following the rules. And Trump learned how to win at it.

When rules were meant to be broken

Before military school, Trump was famous for breaking the rules. Long before buildings would be named after him, schoolmates used the Trump name as shorthand for getting into trouble.

There is only one light haired young man. Guess who?

"We used to refer to our detention as a 'DT' — a 'Donny Trump' — because he got more of them than most other people in the class," said Paul Onish, one of Trump's grade school classmates.

Onish calls Trump one of his best friends at the Kew-Forest School in Forest Hills, Queens. Trump attended the school through seventh grade, and the two of them got into trouble together constantly — the already mentioned offenses of talking out of turn during class, passing notes and throwing spitballs.

Onish remembers a few stunts on the soccer field, too.

"There was even a couple of incidences during half-time when we would eat whole oranges without peeling them in front of the competition to show them how tough we really were," Onish said.

Boys are boys and young adults are still kids. FYI, Joe Grant from the King's College in my Class of 1969 always talked about being tough and engaging in tough contests. Nobody got hurt. Of the weird things Grant did was take cigarette ashes and put them in his beer when we were almost drinking age, and then he'd say, "If your tough, you'll chug it." We all chugged it but it was not good for us.

Joe was hired for a great position at Kodak. He was the smartest IT major in our class. He developed regional enteritis, I think which meant that a few "tough contests" for Joe had gone bad. Kodak pulled back his hiring offer but IBM scobbed him up. He was a smart "dude" when we did not even use the term "dude." He's still living and still doing well. Kodak missed out on a bright young man to buoy their business.

Eating whole oranges with the peels all-on was nothing compared to engaging in a Joe Grant “tough” contest. Trump lived and so did Joe Grant. Isn't life great?

Getting sent up the river

It was the late 1950s — and in the quiet, well-to-do community of Jamaica Estates, Queens, the nonstop antics became embarrassing for Trump's parents.

So right before eighth grade, Trump's father sent him literally up the river to New York Military Academy in the Hudson Valley. Trump would spend the next five years there.

Retired Col. Ted Dobias remembers the tall, lanky kid who showed up at his dormitory.

"I put [him] down at the end of the hall. He didn't know how to make a bed. He didn't know how to shine his shoes. He had a problem, you know, with being a cadet. You know, being a cadet, you gotta take care of yourself," Dobias said.

And Trump the cadet didn't quite know how, at first. Dobias had a reputation for being one of the school's toughest instructors. He was a hardened World War II veteran who made it clear to Trump — he didn't care who his daddy was.

"When he got out of line, he got the same treatment like everybody else. His name was Donald Trump, like Johnny Jones. It was all the same," Dobias said. "Nobody was different. We treated everyone alike."

When following the rules becomes the Game

"He didn't know how to make a bed. He didn't know how to shine his shoes. He had a problem, you know, with being a cadet," retired Col. Ted Dobias said of Trump arriving at NYMA.

New York Military Academy, or NYMA, is tucked in a small speck of a town called Cornwall-on-Hudson. It's a short drive from West Point. Arriving here is like stepping back in time. Antique cannons squat on green fields. Buildings date back to the 1800s.

Back in Trump's day, cadets would wake up near the crack of dawn, hurry into their uniforms and march in formation to breakfast. First-year cadets had to eat their meals squared-off — lifting their forks in a right angle path into their mouths. And after breakfast, they'd scurry back to clean their rooms for inspection. Dobias said it was a place where kids who didn't like following the rules learned to like it

"It's a hell of a thing for a kid to go to a military school — especially when you have to say, 'Yes sir,' 'No sir,' have to learn how to salute, how to do about-face, how to march, how to carry a gun," said Dobias.

But instead of recoiling from the discipline, Trump thrived under it.

In her book "The Trumps: Three Generations of Builders and a Presidential Candidate," Gwenda Blair notes how "Donald seemed to welcome being in a place with clear-cut parameters, a place where he could focus on figuring out how to come out on top and get what he wanted."

Mike Kabealo, one of Trump's roommates at NYMA, said in the confines of the school's rigid rules, Trump wanted to be a standout.

"Cocksure, positive and anything-you-can-do-I-can-do-better kind of stuff — you know, he was very competitive," Kabealo said.

And friends say Trump channeled that competitiveness into everything at military school. When he was in charge of the rifle rack, he cleaned the rifles obsessively. He was meticulous about his uniform. When it was his turn to do inspections in the barracks, he whipped other cadets into shape.

Classmate Ted Levine holds a talking Trump doll, which he sometimes squeezes for advice. It belts out Trumpisms such as "Brand yourself and toot your own horn," and "Have an ego – there's nothing wrong with ego."

"My bed wasn't really made right, and he ripped it," said Ted Levine, another student who roomed with Trump at NYMA.

Trump tore Levine's sheets off during inspections one morning. Levine's bed hadn't passed muster.

"Then I lost it. I totally lost it. So I think I hit him with a broomstick," remembered Levine. "And he came back at me — with his hands. He was bigger than me. And it took three people to get him off me."

Levine was 4 feet 11 inches tall back then. Trump was 6 feet 2 inches. In the pecking order of young boys, that size gave Trump authority. It also helped him excel in athletics. Trump became captain of the baseball team, and Dobias was his coach.

"He was very coachable," Dobias said. "If I told him, 'Do this,' he'll do it. If I told him to do it the other way, he'll do it that way. So that's what made him a good baseball player. He accepted criticism. He wanted to be best. Not better."

Trump was made a cadet captain at NYMA — one of the highest honors for graduates.

And then there were the girls. Classmates said so many girls visited Trump on Sundays.

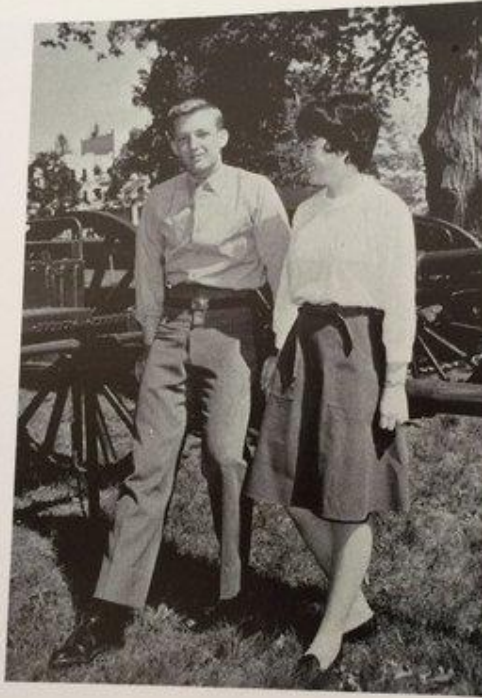

"The type of women who were coming up to see him or he was bringing were definitely from the upper levels of New York society," said classmate George White. "I mean, I remember there were so many, it was a revolving door."

Trump was voted "Ladies' Man" in his high school (military School) senior yearbook. His friends say he cared about his hair even then—growing it to the maximum length regulations would allow, so it would look fuller. Trump had learned to beat the regulations; not just comply.

In military school, think of the tough men he learned with. Perhaps that is why he has no undue respect today for politically appointed US Generals. Think of the respect you might have. Trump knows he is President today, the big mahoff, and he takes a back seat to nobody. I am personally pleased that Donald Trump drives from the front seat and he knows from experience how to lead.

I showed you the picture from the yearbook of the ladies man. In almost all of the tributes or negatives about Trump in Military school that picture emerges. Trump sure looks like a gentleman. Who knows? In the popularity poll picture below, of course Trump is in it. Even the men at military school respected him. The girls were always pleased to accompany him. Why would they not?

An Air of Superiority

I have never been the tallest or the strongest or the handsomest or the best athlete anyplace in life. But I have been close at times. In my high school, the guys that had most of those attributes often got caught up in being the strongest and the handsomest and the best athlete, and the prettiest girls fawned over them. They were cool.

Coming out of baseball practice one night, one of the guys at Meyers High who had such attributes I could only ask for a remake to get decided that he was going to show me how tough he was. Before I knew it, he was pushing me and saying things that even today I cannot remember. I got PO's. He had angered me. He was a lot taller than me but had never exhibited animus towards me before. It really bugged me. I would have taken ten black eyes to pound him once in the face that day after he treated me so badly. I held my ground.

My dad always told me to stand my ground. I had no idea to expect an attack from a teammate. I was a catcher and he was a pitcher at the time. I would not stand for the humiliation though it was just us two. Instead of backing way, I went forward with fists up and I don't know what happened but the "fight" was over as the tough guy backed off and decided he did not want to get roughed up. He said something to end the issue and I let him go.

I did not like to fight but I was ready. A lot of guys feel the same. I suspect Trump, especially a huge Trump intimidated a lot of guys. Yet overall, they became his friends. That happens. I know. The other baseball player and I are still friends ad we are both in our seventies. And coincidentally, we both are Trump supporters.

As alluring as Trump may have been to the ladies, he had a way of laughing when others spoke to and with him that used to get on some of the guys' nerves.

"It made you feel like he was separating himself from you. It made you feel like there was an air of superiority. Just enough of a signal that he was laughing at you," White said.

Who knows. Like my dad said, stand your ground and of course don't hang around with people who disrespect you or who seem to want to put you down. All a guy ever has to do in those circumstances is take their stance and the tough guys most often melt away. Any battle that is not a definite win, means their noses might be just as bloody as yours at the end and most guys are idiots who don't care about that.

I am sure there are some but I recall not instances reviewing Trump history where he bloodied anybody up but being bigger than most, his classmates knew that he was capable of inflicting a powerful licking on anybody who chose to take him on. Trump had learned how to be tough at an early age.

Some thought that perhaps it was that quality that made it difficult to get close to Trump. I don't know but my biggest friend in college, who got a tryout letter from the Dallas Cowboys was a gentle giant. He was one of my favorites when he passed away just a few years ago. I bet to those that Trump appeared as a gentle giant, like me and Frannie (Francis Xavier) Kurilla, they loved him. I miss Frannie today to pieces.

"I don't think he had a handful of loyalists; you know?" Levine, his former roommate, said. "Because he was so competitive that everybody who could come close to him he had to destroy."

But now, more than 50 years later, Levine says he and the other guys still kind of admire Trump. If the Trump had been giving them bloody noses during their "friendship," they'd more than likely be bragging about it today. Big guys often just know who they are and they would rather just be friends than intimidators.

To show how they were lifetime buds, today Levine's office is littered with Donald Trump knickknacks. Like a talking Trump doll that belts out Trumpisms such as "Brand yourself and toot your own horn," and "Have an ego — there's nothing wrong with ego."

John Anstett, 76 years old, lives across the street from me. He gives me Dutch Uncle talks because he is five years older. His most famous advice is when he tells me to "Shine your own light." Thanks John.

His wife Carol is the boss of their home but when the truth is all known, the historians will find that when all is said and done, John always knew that Carol was always right.

Sometimes, Levine said, he squeezes his Trump doll for advice.

"It's reinforcement — positive reinforcement of true values that are very important for businessmen," he said.

Values like winning — how to fight back and win.

Levine gave the doll another squeeze.

"Never give up," the doll squawked. "Under any circumstances, never give up."

Levine said he didn't learn that one from Trump — they both learned that one in military school.

Military school was a tough pill to swallow for Trump and a lot of the "boys." Yet, overall, it gave Donald Trump the stamina to take any kind of crap that would ever be thrown at him.

Otherwise, the Democrat punching bag would by now be like a worn-out pounded-out pinjata. We know that a pinjata is a container often made of papier-mâché, pottery, or cloth that is decorated, and filled with small toys or candy, or both, and then broken as part of a ceremony or celebration. When the Dems pound the pinjata, they hope there are no left over parts. But, you already knew that.

Chapter 8 Kelly Family Lessons v Trump Family Lessons

Before Military School at age 13, I do not know what Donald Trump's lessons were every day when he was growing up in his 23-room mansion that was loaded with everything. One thing we do know is that his dad sure was a busy, business man.

Young Donald Trump learned a lot in school and elsewhere but I don't think that he learned what my father had learned and had taught me about life just by being "poor." Trump was never poor. I never felt poor so I can't tell anybody how it feels. I believe Donald's dad did not encourage him to take everything that "he could out of life and that was that."

But perhaps with five Trumps, like my family size and my four siblings, his dad had a tough time keeping up with all the demands of parenting despite all the paid hands available for assistance. I like to say, “Nothing in life worth having is easy.”

For Fred Trump, his work was cut out for him. Thankfully, like my dad’s, Fred Trump’s kids were all smart. Being smart helps but it does not mean all make it to become both good people and successful.

Fred Jr. for example, celebrated life too much and met an early death. This affected the President big time. Donald Trump even today is a non-drinker. He does not dip his mind into things that might harm it.

My dad rarely got drunk except for when his brothers were in town. Dad hated going to Confession to tell the priest that he had gotten drunk. Yet, he did and he was at church even when he felt poorly.

As a brewery worker my dad loved it when I gave him a sign with a Texas cowpoke on it saying: “Never trust a man who doesn’t drink.” It would have taken a lot for my dad to begin to trust Trump but I think he would have after he heard Fred Jr.’s story.

As a brewery worker, Ed Kelly Sr. had a tough time saying “no” at the free brewery bar, especially when he was the bartender but he did not as a rule drink to excess.

I often talked politics with my dad. After being an Independent in PA for two years from age 21 to 23, my dad told me to become a Democrat so I could vote in the primary elections. I did as he suggested. Until he passed away, he and I voted Republican mostly as we both felt that the Democrats truly had changed from being my father’s Democrat Party.

We both thought America deserved better than what the new Democrats were offering. No it was not because the Republicans were all great but at least their message was mostly good for the people—especially Catholic people.

I am convinced that my dad would love Donald Trump today if dad were alive. He'd watch Trump closer than a regular guy who took a nip every now and then, but like me, he would conclude that God gave us Donald Trump. So, like me, he would figure we better take care of Mr. D. Trump, simply because great leaders like Trump rarely come along twice.

My dad, I believe, would say that it was easier for he and Biddie (my mother) to raise their five than for Fred and Mary to raise their mini-brood. We did not have as many rooms in which to hide, nor were there temptations that my dad and mom could offer us that might hurt us as easily as the Trump's many.

My dad may have had an easier day of work as a laborer at Stegmaier Brewery than Fred Trump had as the owner of his own company. Dad worked a seven-hour union shift at the Brewery with a half hour break for lunch, while Fred Trump's days would not end until all the business of the day was processed. Dad had no car and he cleared his mind twice a day when he walked back and forth to work two miles each way, each day.

Fred Trump may not have inhibited his son enough in those first twelve years as much as my dad had kept the Kelly siblings in line. I don't really know. But, let's face it, Donald's dad's effort produced a president of our great United States. How about that? My dad was pleased mostly with my sister Nancy but he thought the world of all of us—Ed, me, and the twins, Mary & Joseph.

My dad's efforts produced five happy children. We all knew that we were well loved and that we could all succeed in life. He had us all contributing to the family funds from the first dollar we ever were able to earn.

To get a buck to spend, for example, I was thankful to be a morning paper boy; an evening pinboy, and a weekend soda delivery person before I was thirteen years old. Those jobs helped mold me into a better man. The family got its financial share of my job efforts. That's just the way it was as my dad was getting laid off at the brewery. We all learned to hate Lent, by the way. That was the season when even Catholics would fast on beer and Stegmaier Brwery sales would go down because the Catholics were not buying as much Stegmaier beer. So, my dad did not work full weeks at the brewery.

I cannot know what Trump learned but I do know that from being Fred Trump's son and then becoming famous himself, the paparazzi and the gossip-mongers may have learned more about young Trump than he knew about himself. That is a tough life to lead and regular guys like me and my siblings never had to face such burdens.

Trump got summer jobs from his dad so he was able to make a few bucks himself in jobs that were interesting. Fred Trump hired his sons, Donald, Robert, and Fred Jr. to spend summers working at Trump construction sites and rent-collection offices. Any dad who could have their kids working in the business rather than taking an allowance would welcome that learning opportunity for his children. Fred Trump Sr. was no exception to that rule.

We cannot know the stress a young Trump had to feel dealing with the Fred Trump-type paparazzi. I do know that not having funds would limit a person in my community. I of course never had to worry about an aggressive press or any press for that matter. If I could find a nice job, it was a good deal. The local paper did not care at all about my employment.

If you don't have it, you can't spend it. You certainly cannot spoil yourself. Fred Trump did not want to spoil his son, though having it all, and with Donald and young Fred Trump knowing they had it all, it was a tough task for Fred Trump Sr. to manage all of his kids. So, to make it right, even his kids had to work and learn.

My dad would have had Fred Sr. over for a lot of beers and they would have liked each other. My dad was #1 in eighth grade before he went to Coughlin High School. This was at a time in the 1930's when few boys finished high school. My father did well and graduated. He could have done anything in life. However, putting enough food on the table for all the Kelly's as well as grand mom and grandpop McKeown who lived with us, was his priority # one.

Brewery workers such as dad did reasonably well for a long time until the big breweries began to sell more beer locally than the local breweries like Stegmaier and Gibbons. Fred Trump's work was under his control so he did not experience the slowdowns like happened at the brewery.

For Donald Trump, for at least his first twelve years, he had it all—all he wanted and perhaps even lots more than he needed.

He had it made growing up. It had to be tough to be a good person under his circumstances. I would think that overall he tried to be a good kid but it was easy to fail.

Young people presented too early with easy opportunities often fail. Donald Trump still has a unique determination that keeps him from failing. He is into winning. Failing is a term with which he is unfamiliar. As we've all heard from his rally speeches, Trump likes winning, winning, and winning. He also likes the people of America to experience winning, winning, and winning.

Trump is bold and brave and nobody pushes him around. Even my dad would say that is a good trait. I do know that the President is a fine man today in a very tough world. A lesser man could not deal with it all. My good friends and I are sure happy that he is our president.

Just like we forgave Nixon, Kennedy, Clinton, and Obama, the people of America must forgive Donald Trump for any and all of his past transgressions. As Americans, we wish him the best of good fortune in keeping America great. We all deserve the opportunity to be good and we believe that Donald Trump wants to be good and he functions as a good man. We thank God that he sent Donald Trump to save America from the socialists, and the corrupt media.

Chapter 9 Trump Hate Was Born of Politics

The Apprentice helped us all get to know him

Because he decided to be his own man, Donald Trump is no longer held in high regard by a press that once fawned over his every move. What changed? Just one thing. When Trump made his political affiliation known after donating to many, many Democrats for years, it was as a Republican. It's kinda tough to be a successful capitalist and be a real Democrat at the same time. Before he ran for President, all Hollywood and Network TV doors were open to him, especially NBC, who flaunted Trump being their guy just like their Peacock.

They loved him muchly; but then he actually decided to be president. Like many things to which Trump aspires in life, Donald Trump actually became the President. Which of us could do that?

The NBC love affair ended long before the inauguration as Hollywood and Network TV found everything they had once loved about Trump too distasteful to permit him to be in their midst. How about that? It would be nice to get to read some of those memos used to develop such a universal negative opinion.

To show the respect that Trump once commanded as a star, consider that in January 2004: "The Apprentice" premiered on NBC. The show was created by Mark Burnett. You may recall that it offered the winner a $250,000 job with Donald Trump for a year. More than 28 million people watched that first season's finale. Trump was the big winner each episode regardless of who the "game" winner actually was as he was paid $1 million an episode. Not too shabby. Trump always created the best deals.

Trump is a peculiarly smart businessman. He has the Midas touch in his business dealings and he has leveraged those skills in his role as president. It is not by accident. He is simply good at whatever he does. That talent has come in handy.

First he became one of the most successful business people of all time. Then he switched gears and quickly became one of the most successful TV stars of all time. Now, he is one of the most successful presidents of all time. His high marks are for his accomplishments and not for the amount of love he gets from his TV fan base.

He loves the US and so he donates his entire salary to help the country. President Trump now earns just $400,000 a year; not $1million a year or $1million a rally or 1 million per episode. And, though many liberals cannot or will not believe it, he actually does donate all but $1 dollar a year to help the country. Recently President Trump agreed to accept a salary of $1.00 per year, apparently because of the tax laws.

Barack Obama according to Forbes donated over $1 million to charity in total over 8 years. Herbert Hoover donated his total salary, reserving some to pay various staff members more than their salaries. Additionally, JFK donated his entire government salaries to charity when he served as a Congressman, Senator and President. Other than these, presidents have always kept their salaries.

We have had a number of presidents who, thanks to a presumptive sense of entitlement, lived well-known, slimy private lives in the WH. Though Democrats won't admit it, President Trump is not one of those and he does not live and has not led a slimy private life in the White House.

Without any evidence, and despite not being the first, or the worst president, Trump has been labeled as existing at the top of the slime heap by the slimiest slime-ball press. No, he is not even given a small chance for religious redemption by his detractors. Democrats and the corrupt press describe him in just three words: "bad, bad, bad." But is he really? The evidence does not back up the accusations.

Some presidents, about whom, many still think the world, were not as clean-living as Trump in the White House. For example, Warren G. Harding, John F. Kennedy, and Bill Clinton long before Trump even thought about changing to politics from stardom and the business world, even though they were married, were well known by insiders and eventually the entire world for using countless women before tossing them aside. Not Trump! Not Trump!

Were any Presidents as bad as the Trump caricature?

In terms of known dalliances, Harding, Kennedy, and Clinton top the list. Clinton almost was impeached for what some might call a lot more than simple impropriety but I bet we could find other presidents who would be on the list but were more discreet and undiscovered.

Nobody in the mainstream press includes Obama on any bad list. Well, nobody except Larry Sinclair in his book Cocaine, Sex, Lies & Murder. It is not on my recommended reading list either but it has been out there since 2010 and is available on Amazon. Like Schultz, I know nothing. There is no guarantee of a truthful read and it helps to know the Obama White House fought the book's availability for years. The mere inference of an issue would get Trump impeached in today's Democrat controlled HOUSE.

Just like Trump, these presidents ran the whole country in their time. Trump for all we know has been a moral and an upright one-girl-guy since arriving in Washington. All the dirt in their shovels that's real dirt must be from when Trump was a younger man loaded with oats.

Somehow these three “dudes” and the last president are deemed to be OK, but Trump's image, in which I repeat there have been no documented trysts of any kind since he moved into the White House, is, according to the sleaze media, forever tarnished. Worse than that, his detractors say he has no chance of redemption. The corrupt press reportedly already has a copy of Trump's reservation on an express train to Hell to be used upon his passing. That, my friends is the essence of Trump Derangement Syndrome.

Many Americans, mostly Democrats and members of the elite academe in higher education believe Donald Trump has already proven he's the worst U.S. president of all time. They cite no facts but Democrats need no facts just serious enough accusations. That's their MO.

For me, the validity of these results is like taking a vote about whether Democrats or Republicans are the most honest and polling only the Democrats. Naturally, in the 2017 C-Span Presidential Historians Survey, the esteemed group of academicians on the panel recognized that there is serious competition for the unwanted title of the worst president. The best we could get as to who did this supposed honest voting is as follows:

“Dozens of academic experts evaluated America's commanders-in-chief based on 10 "qualities," ranging from economic management to moral authority. “

The results make one thing clear: The U.S. had a bunch of poor presidents in the 19th century, even as the country was growing into a powerhouse. Coincidentally, the Republican Party was formed in the middle of the 19th century.

In the 20th and 21st century, these academics found just about every Republican so bad they placed them into the top 20 bad guys list and they managed to put Bush in the top 10. What else would you expect?

FYI, Lincoln, the first Republican president of all time, won the election held on Tuesday, November 6, 1860. It was a four-way contest. Abraham Lincoln and Hannibal Hamlin emerged triumphant. As most who studied history know, the election of Lincoln served as the primary catalyst of the American Civil War.

When Trump is eligible for this “worst presidents list” list after he leaves office in 2025, you can bet they’ll replace today’s recognized worst president #1 James Buchanan—who is the 15th president—with President Trump, who is the 45th. It’s only fair. Humph!! Hey, they are Democrats and they do think they run the country. It is up to us and the wimpy Republicans to determine how long they think the Dems own the country.

Does Trump give to charity?

Including the annual donation of his total salary, it is very safe to say that Trump’s annual giving is more than the Bern’s total income.

I recently passed along an email note that showed Bernie Sanders made over a million dollars last year and gave less than 1% of it to charity. He probably forgot as charity was not necessarily on his mind.

The irony of the post was that “The Bern” campaigns against greed all the time. Yet, he then hoards 99% of his income for himself. The guy I sent it to, a good friend but a Trump hater wrote back a factless innuendo: “Wonder how much that person in the WH gave to charity?” We don’t need the President’s tax returns to answer any part of that.

Sophie Austin wrote on August 19th, 2019 that “President Donald Trump continues to maintain his campaign promise to donate his $400,000 annual White House salary with U.S. government agencies. In August 2019, a White House spokesman announced that Trump donated $100,000, his second-quarter salary, to the U.S. Surgeon General's office. "I donate 100% of my President's salary, $400,000, back to our Country, and feel very good about it!" Trump tweeted Aug. 16. His first-quarter salary in 2019 went to the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Trump donated his third quarter salary for 2018 to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism. Trump's older brother Fred Jr. died after struggling from alcoholism in 1981.

A famous Ronald Reagan quote and one my favorites nets out the assumption of my friend that Trump is a tightwad and a miser. Trump is actually very charitable as proven just partially by what he does with his salary. Here's Reagan at his best:

"The trouble with our liberal friends is not that they're ignorant; it's just that they know so much that isn't so."
Ronald Reagan.

Are Trump supporters sold on Trump?

Yes, we are!

If Trump were not so rich, he would be a regular guy and he is in fact more of a regular guy than those big shots who hate him such as Mitt Romney and Adam Schiff. The sheer ordinariness of Trump and his coalition in which I am a silent member, is impossible to overstate. Most Democrats and the media would say "they can't observe Trump because he makes them sick." Aren't they cute?

They learn everything they know about Trump from Fake News CNN, the "Corrupt News Network." If you can't observe the subject you are investigating, because you can never reach the truth, then you cannot know anything that would be necessary to make a judgment.

Just look at some data from the Voter Study Group. It shows that more than 80% of Trump's votes came from men and women who voted for Republican nominee Mitt Romney just four years earlier. However, few would vote for Romney today and that is a fact. He may have always been a weasel but for sure Trump supporters have promoted him to Senator Weasel since Mitt won the Senate and became the third stooge joining Lisa Murkowski of Alaska and Susan Collins of Maine. Earth to Romney, Murkowski, and Collins: please join the Democrats because they love you. We hate nobody but if we did, you three would be first on our list.

Some would decree that nobody loves Trump. But, they would be big-time wrong. The group that likes Trump contains the usual suspects among American Republicans: tax-cut advocates, religious evangelicals and Catholics, gun rights supporters and business types eager for deregulation. Trump has made sure to give each faction what they most desire just like any good politician would. That keeps them in his camp even as the media flays him with each supposed transgression—which, of course his supporters see as outright lies.

The news media's behavior also keeps wimpy Republicans in line. Republican lawmakers, I regret are mostly self-serving wimps and are worthy of little respect. With the bogus Mueller hearings and the sham closed-door impeachment hearings, there is only one thing worse than a Republican lawmaker—a Democrat lawmaker.

And, the gap is huge. Whoever gave the Dems their power in the House in 2018, I hope are rethinking that big blunder. The country has never been in such bad political shape.

The media makes sport of lying about Trump and keeping hidden the truth of anything good (and he does much good) that he might do in office. It is impossible to overstate the degree of daily vituperation visited upon the president in the media.

Comics and actors use their non-political programs to attack him politically and personally, often to the implicit and explicit applause of the corrupt press, whose job it is supposed to be to simply report the news.

Virtually all coverage outside of about ½ of the supposedly conservative Fox News and a few isolated conservative outlets is negative. It is often couched in highly hostile terms. When the hostility is open, the leftist audiences often provide reinforcement applause.

They definitely hate President Trump and they act like it every day. No matter what successes he may have had and still may, their standing orders are to give no credit to the president.

The left commands its soldiers to not even discuss things that are not wins but break-evens. Trump is not to get any credit for anything that is not bad. They will not give him an inch even when clearly he does things that should bring him a wholesale redemption.

The fix is in. Trump gets no credit for any redemption. Everybody on the left is against every move Donald Trump makes. Only the regular people that he serves, who are his ardent supporters can see past the constant noise of the propagandists. That's a tough life but Trump is an exceptionally tough fellow from years and years of practice.

Virtually all of the columnists at the New York Times and the Washington Post, America's two "most respected, yet corrupt, dailies," despise Trump – and that includes nearly all of the conservative, libertarian and Republican columnists too. Trump supporters who follow news in any form, cannot escape the daily blast of negativity. In the conservative banter nowadays is an assertion that sixteen minutes after Trump's inauguration, the Washington Post was calling for his impeachment. Does that seem fair for any president to have to endure? Do the Republicans have a right to retaliate if ever there is another Democrat president?

I know that with or without their attacks, like many other conservatives, who predictably are hardened by these corrupt fake media attacks, my attitude mirrors many others who wish there was a law against professional lying and professional propaganda by the fourth estate, the supposed trustworthy media. Sometimes I wish we could bring back the founders for a year or two to clean house. They never expected free men to attack free men as we do today in America. .

As minor issues or fake issues are blown up into major catastrophes by the fake news media, it's not surprising that the press has no time to follow any real accomplishments of the president, no matter how significant and no matter what the positive impact may be on the country. They'd rather the country fail than for Trump to gain any positive favor.

Some call it the "boy who cried wolf" syndrome when this biased, corrupt, progressive media cries "wolf" at every passing shadow. Their mirrors show them for sure that they are indeed the wolves as they openly make false claims against Trump, always expecting their sheep to follow their lead and buy it all.

Trump backers are smart and have had enough. We simply don't believe them when they say that a wolf might actually be coming. A trick pulled every day in the media soap opera need not be heeded. There will be another trick the next day. Honesty in the press is no more. The fourth estate in America is long gone.

I have been preaching that we rarely hear about all the good Trump does. Rather than pull off a boring list for you, what I have done is to print the full text of the Minneapolis Minnesota Rally in Chapter 19. This great rally went on for an hour and 55 minutes. In this rally speech, the president covers his most salient accomplishments as only he can. Please read chapter 19 and I guarantee you will enjoy it and you will be impressed that anybody could talk so well for so long.

Chapter 10 Ebenezer Scrooge, Melvin Udall, and Donald Trump

Trump was and perhaps still is the epitome of the guy who my father would not envy because it would be tougher for him as a tall, tanned, athletic, and very handsome man to get to heaven than the rest of mankind. But, I see President Trump also as the man that would be the redeemed scrooge after the third visit—The Gost of Christmas Future. .

Trump might have had a tough time being a good man but God is all-forgiving. God clearly had a special plan for Donald.

As I have previously noted in my Freshman Year in high school, I really could not believe all the pretty girls at Meyers High School. I was the youngest person in my class and my love of sports preoccupied my attention. I did not have my first date until my junior year. A girl I knew from grade school asked me to a party. For me it was a big deal and she was very nice. It became lots easier for me after that.

Trump would have loved my school. The girls would have liked him instantly. To repeat, in addition to having more money than most, Trump was a lot taller than most, was well-built, smart, and overall, he cast a very handsome shadow. His athletic gifts were superior to most. You can't deny all Donald Trump had going for him.

Because he was a cut above, he had all the temptations my dad cautioned me to worry about. If you want to get to heaven in the future, the point always was that you could not gobble up all the pleasures of the world and expect to still get to heaven without doing your share of good deeds.

I think some of the rants on Trump include that he could not say no to all he had. Over time, he did become a better man. But, like many sewing their oats, he needed his time.

I remember Jack Nicholson in a great heartwarming movie with Helen Hunt. My recollection is "You make me wish I were a better man." But here is the exact quote from the movie:

"You make me want to be a better man."

I can't think of a better thing to say to anybody, especially a love interest, and that is why this saying is easy to find on the Internet. To whet your memory, I know it from a movie with Jack Nicholson, who came out of "The Shining," shining. He became Melvin Udall, a shut-in, obsessive-compulsive novelist. It looked like Melvin was loaded with cash like Trump but was having an inglorious life. Jack Nicholson as Melvin, in the movie became involved with Carol Connelly (played by Helen Hunt). "Melvin" was infatuated to say the least.

She was "just a waitress" at the restaurant where he ate on a more than regular basis. It also highlighted his gay neighbor, Simon Bishop (played by Greg Kinnear). Because of his involvement with these people, Melvin slowly started to come out of his shell and not only wished he were a better man but he became a much better man. In many ways he was never a really bad guy but he began to better control his peculiarities. He was a rich author, and he spoiled and pampered himself yet. It was fun to watch him take control over himself in a positive way once he was smitten.

Relating to Donald Trump, I think all his life, Trump wanted to be a better man in all things human. He did not want to be a bad guy nor did he want to be known as a bad guy. I think today Trump is no different than he was all his life. Like Melvin Udall, Trump has gotten better control over himself as he works every day and loves it—being the guy who is bringing many good things to the people of America.

Everybody has somebody in their life that does not like them. Trump has more people like that than most. It does help to remember that before Donald Trump came out as a Republican, he had friends galore. What do you think of that?

Do you see the Udall connection to Trump? Melvin Udall is not the perfection of the universe when we first meet him in this movie. He comes across as just the opposite. However, by the time the movie gets inside of Melvin, we have learned that he is not the bad guy he seems to be. Plus, most of us wish him well. But then, again it is not an ideologically themed movie. And, Trump is not really in the movie.

Ebenezer Scrooge is another Trump-like character who arguably has many more failings growing up than Trump. In terms of which Scrooge, He would be unlike Alastair Sim, George C. Scott, Patrick Stewart, or George C. Scott as Scrooge. Instead, he would be more like Bill Murray as Frank Cross in Scrooged. The selfish way they portray Frank Cross is exactly the way the left paints Trump as President.

Before Murray (Frank Cross) becomes a good man, he is painted with an ugly brush. One begins to imagine that the script writers made him into the worst and nastiest Scrooge ever with little saving grace—before the ghosts, of course. It seems like it may have been these same story tellers who cast Donald Trump into the same negative light. But, they never finished the Dickens story as they do not give Trump the opportunity to ever meet the three redeeming Dickens' ghosts.

No sir. There were and still are no three ghosts to visit the Trumpster. No way. That would be too risky for the Dems and the press—the possibility of Trump looking good after the angels teach him about life. Right or wrong, neither the press nor the Dems could ever let that happen. We have cited many reasons why the left can never give Trump a break and under all circumstances, he can never look good. It is against the drive-by-media's big plan to discredit him in all things always with his base and anybody else ready to be duped. The before image of Frank Cross is about what they have done to Trump.

And so at the best and the worst, with different script writers than the Dems and the corrupt media Donald Trump could become Scrooge or perhaps a better Frank Cross in the good Bob Kratchit story. Despite the press and the Dems, in the real Dickens' version of the story, after three ghostly visits, God sends Trump his redemption.

We see it every day. Trump already has been redeemed. Do any of us think Nancy Pelosi or Adam Schiff or Chuck Schumer deserve redemption over Donald Trump. No way! We especially see Trump's goodness at the great Trump rallies. Look at the pictures of the pleased, happy regular Joe's behind Trump at these heartwarming rallies. Democrats and the corrupt media will never see it but Donald Trump is a good man regardless whether they choose to know it or not and whether they choose to admit it or not.

Let me stop and tell a brief story here. I just received it from a good friend named Foun10. Here it is. No explanation necessary:

The old priest lay dying in a Hospital. For years he had faithfully served the people of our nation's capital.

He motioned for his nurse to come near.

Yes, Father? said the nurse.

I would really like to see Chuck Schumer and Nancy Pelosi before I die, whispered the priest

I'll see what I can do, Father, replied the nurse The nurse sent the request to them and waited for a response. Soon the word arrived. Chuck and Nancy would be delighted to visit the priest.

As they went to the hospital, Chuck commented to Nancy: I don't know why the old priest wants to see us, but it will certainly help our images. Nancy couldn't help but agree. When they arrived at the priest's room, the priest took Nancy's hand in his right hand and Chuck's hand in his left. There was silence and a look of serenity on the old priest's face. Finally Nancy spoke: Father, of all the people you could have chosen, why did you choose us to be with you as you near the end?

The old priest slowly replied, "I have always tried to pattern my life after our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The old priest continued... He died between two lying thieves. I would like to do the same!"

Give yourself some time to chuckle. You'll laugh harder when you realize it may even be a true story. Isn't humor a cure for a tired soul?

Trump's redemption is assured

Neither the corrupt press nor the hate-filled Democrats can ever make God deny redemption to anybody, even Scrooge—even Trump as Scrooge. We all know that once you get your redemption, chances are you become a permanent good fellow. I n this story, Trump as Scrooge, after his redemption celebrated everything, including Christmas better than anybody ever had in history. The big turkeys in town all began to cluck against Scrooge as their time hanging in the windows was shortened. The Kratchit's won the day and Trump as Scrooge helped sign them all up for long lives—even Tiny Tim.

I include the rest of the paragraph here because I want everybody to know that Dickens could have made a new lifetime of authoring if he had lived in Trump times. He could have used Donald Trump as the former miser. Dickens wanted the world to have hope so we know that he had a unique way of representing hope as a real idea. Here's how: Hope you recall from the movie or the book. It is an important life lesson.

Dickens represents hope because if Ebenezer Scrooge can change; maybe anyone can! Maybe even Donald J. Trump can change. Trump, who in 2019 had already changed though the liberal progressives in the media and stodgy unforgiving Dems as well as the Democrat Party at large refuse to acknowledge his change. They still will not give the man a break because it is not in their daily soap opera script and their three year old plan to not accept the results of the 2016 election. Sore loser!

Ask your God how Dickens might write you into a book about Trump? If you are a tried and true liberal, will God ever give up on you because you too might offer the President no hope of redemption. Why should you find any redemption if you would deny it to Donald Trump? Do you think if you have become a leftist who is against God and life, that you can be a good enough man or woman to be redeemed. Ask yourself. I would suggest you start getting accustomed to “hot spots.”

At the beginning of Dickens' great story, we get the impression Scrooge is so stuck in his ways that nothing could possibly make him nicer or more generous. Dickens spends a lot of time in Stave One describing Scrooge as a terrible person and so his change is even more significant.

As people, we often look at our own habits and think we are incapable of changing them. Progressives look at Donald Trump rather than their own faults, and want to convince the rest of mankind that Trump is incapable of ever being a good man. Yet, they know they lie. They are the wicked and they become more wicked with their false accusations against the President

In Dickens, we sort of give into the idea that we are a certain way, like stubborn, or penny-pinching. However, this story shows that even those of us who are very hardened in our ways, like the progressives' overly exaggerated description of Trump—even we can change for the better. Does that not give us all hope for ourselves and others. Can we deny such hope for the President of the United States. I think not!

I do not think that the Scrooge lesson hit Trump very well until he matured. Maybe he never knew of it until he found himself at military school. Soften your own hard heart, my friends as you too will seek the kingdom of God and you too will need the Lord's redemption. I say that if you are willing to deny another the Lord's redemption then it shall be denied to you.

I do not really know as I am mortal but I do think this is how it is. I believe when it is your time for the wild oats to have all been sewn, you have a right and I believe you also have a duty to redeem yourself through your own good works. Mr. Donald J. Trump is no different from any other man in that regard.

You can see his goodness and his humanness at his famous rallies unless your heart is too hardened. If you remain hardened against the President, why, at the end of your time, would God not send you to Gehenna rather than where redemption can be found. Even though Donald Trump will never know me, even without his knowledge, I am pleased to be his friend. Most Trump friends and supporters feel the same. It may not get us to heaven but it won't send us to hell either.

Whether the three ghosts ever paid Trump a visit or not, the liberal corrupt media and the lying progressive Democrats have no right to say Trump is worse than Scrooge in that he cannot redeem himself under any circumstances.

Donald Trump, when working for America, or when recounting his triumphs and accomplishments and promising more at his rallies, looks like the happy Scrooge on Christmas day. He is forever looking out the window for the young man to go fetch the prized turkey for the enjoyment of the Bob Cratchit family. How about you? Do you have the power given to some to forgive? Or will you deny the President his redemption? Then, if you do deny, once kind sir or madam, what should God do with you?

Is there anybody who Dickens wrote into his book, that would not tell me that Mr. Trump at any point of his life should not be able to redeem himself. Would Dickens believe a Trump-like character by exercising good acts and good works for others could actually achieve redemption? Or would Dickens take him to the guillotine and on to Gehenna? You all know Dickens was a softie so Trump in a novel by Dickens would surely have his Scrooge-like redemption. And, that I believe is good.

Surely Donald J. Trump, is not the worst man who ever lived. You too should see that in my humble opinion, whether you are progressive or conservative. You should be kind enough to grant him the redemption he deserves as he goes about doing kind things and smart things for Americans of all descents. Who are you to deny God in his mission of redemption?

From what I see, President Trump, a good man who decided later in life, when he had sewn his oats, that, like the redeemed Scrooge, he wanted to be as good as he could be, should be granted by God, that opportunity.

We all know that Trump loves babies alive and not dead, (no infanticide); and he likes them well and healthy from the womb (no abortion of viable babies); and he wants no babies who have any chance—aborted. How can a man with such good thoughts be deemed bad for eternity?

Attending one of his rallies, which the great news organizations often forget or choose not to report about, will tell you quickly, that this man, who could have been the prodigal son but did not leave so he did not have to come back, chooses to respect God on high as the master of us all. Looking at it objectively, this man, one of God's creatures, does not deserve the thumping he gets from hate-filled Democrats and the corrupt media. It is my opinion and that of many others that Donald J. Trump is a better person than at least 99% of his accusers.

Dear Lord, if they persist in their damnation of Donald Trump with their hardened hearts, please do to them what they wish done to him.

Most of us who like Trump and who are brave enough to engage the negators, have been hammered by Trump haters for years. Their attacks are mostly innuendo with no facts or examples. It is never a fair fight because the left lies to make its points. It is always a tough battle finding arguments for such people when to them honesty is not a constraint.

I love all my friends, even the crazy liberal progressives who hate Trump. However, it seems like too many of them would rather give me up as a friend than admit that Donald Trump is not Satan. I choose not to engage them on that. They are who they are and I am who I am. They call Trump Satan and a liar, yet that is exactly what they are themselves.

Donald Trump is not Satan and an objective analysis would prove that he really is not any worse and perhaps he is even a much better man than former presidents Warren Harding, JFK, or William Jefferson Clinton—all of whom permitted their desire for the opposite sex in compromised positions to control how they treated women in general. Yet, we all know none of them ever paid as big a political price for their transgressions than what they would exact from President Trump.

I mention them again for effect, not because of their record as presidents as written in the US archives. It is because they clearly had issues with their sex drives while they wielded major power from the White House. Unlike these men, all former presidents who had dalliances while in office, President Trump surely has had his libido well in check from the moment he began to go about his presidential duties. Moreover, he has a fine lady, Melania Trump, staunchly loyal, to help him with his mission.

Melania Trump, a businesswoman and the wife of Donald Trump, would describe the president, her husband as intensely loyal to his family, friends, employees and country. "There is a great deal of love in the Trump family," Melania Trump said. "That is our bond. That is our strength."

Though the Democrats and the press may try to deny Trump any sense of redemption, his family life proves that he has already received it. Thank God that Democrats are not God—not even close.

Let me end this chapter with the same paragraph that concludes Dickens, "A Christmas Carol." The following is Dickens final narration about Scrooge's life after his redemption. It is most often read as the last part of the story. Here it is:

He had no further intercourse with Spirits, but lived upon the Total-Abstinence Principle ever afterwards; and it was always said of him that he knew how to keep Christmas well, if any man alive possessed the knowledge. May that be truly said of us, and all of us! And so, as Tiny Tim observed, God bless Us, Every One!

Chapter 11 Former Female Democrat Immigrant Likes Trump

10 Reasons I Like Donald Trump, From A Female, Former-Democrat Immigrant

By Saritha Prabhu, (picture on left). She is a freelance writer. This piece was written for the Federalist (federalist.com) November 4, 2019

Donald Trump is the perfect president to counter the D.C. swamp and the foreign policy blob.

I heard Rush Limbaugh praising this lady's article on November 5, 2019, just one day after it was published. It fits this book nicely and I know you will enjoy it. Here goes:

As a voter who lives far away from the Beltway bubble, I increasingly find myself harboring an uncomfortable secret: I like Donald Trump, and think he's the perfect president for these times.

Now, I know that's a big no-no. In fact, I probably should keep it to myself. After all, the mainstream media has been working non-stop to make me and countless others hate the president and see him as Public Enemy No. 1.

I'm also decidedly not the kind of voter who is supposed to like Trump; in fact, all my intersecting identities are supposed to hate Trump with a vengeance: I'm a woman, a legal immigrant, a person of color (never liked the term), a former Democrat, and a third-party voter in 2016.

Liking Trump openly is very difficult these days, and it is not recommended that you do so. It's especially difficult in the social circles I move in.

If you've noticed, even some Trump voters and Trump-supporting commentators say things like, "I don't like Trump, but I like his policies," or "He has flaws, but..." which is a neat way of putting distance between oneself and the president.

Enumerating the reasons Trump is alright is especially necessary because of the constant vituperation he faces everyday from different liberal quarters. Here are 10 reasons I like Trump.

First, he is sui generis, a singularly unique individual who has single-handedly transformed almost everything about American politics, by sheer force of his personality and ideas. Presidents dream of being transformational, and Trump has transformed politics in ways many presidents can only dream about.

He has transformed both political parties, the mainstream media, and the presidential campaigns, and moved the Overton Window on many issues. He has shown many of our institutions for what they actually are and for what we suspected them to be, and broken their brains in the process. His methods may not always be good, but the results have been okay.

Second, by loudly questioning everything in his unorthodox way he has made us re-examine many things: our bloated bureaucracy, some of our egoistic federal civil servants who believe they're in charge of our republic, the much-vaunted liberal international order, our awful elites and the meritocracy that produced them. Most important, his foreign policy ideas and actions have generated a long-overdue discussion on America's global policeman role and its unsustainable costs to our people.

Third, he loves America, and his love is genuine, palpable and almost retro. We could do with a little of that nowadays, swimming as we are in a sea of self-loathing, self-flagellation, and history-rewriting from the left. America, of course, has its flaws and sins, but it is refreshing to be reminded by our president that it still stands tall.

Fourth, he says what he thinks, is remarkably accessible, and is probably the only president who can't seem to resist answering questions thrown at him. In this, he demonstrates a guilelessness and, shall we say, honesty quite unlike any politician, past or present. It gets him into trouble, of course, but also gets him admirers.

His rhetorical style is, to say the least, unconventional but often effective. By talking like a real person and not trafficking in platitudes and liberal pieties, he has made it difficult for conventional politicians to do their thing.

Fifth, he is clearly a non-ideologue and pragmatic, shown in spades in the way he has refashioned the Republican Party's orthodoxies on trade, immigration, and foreign intervention.

Sixth, his care for American voters seems genuine, especially toward the people who voted for him and show him unflagging support. He is indeed an odd president: a Manhattan billionaire who has a "blue collar sensibility" and relates to voters who've suffered bipartisan neglect from D.C. politicians for decades.

And may I say that his rallies are a thing to behold: all camaraderie and affection between Trump and the crowd, characterized by his playful, extemporaneous riffs, funny and sarcastic, with the underlying theme being a conspiratorial partnership against the smug, self-dealing ruling class and media elites that need to be defeated. No wonder Democratic leaders are anxious about the 2020 election—they can't compete with Trump's offbeat charisma.

Not to mention that he's funny, but you need a special sensor to appreciate it, which the dour, humorless left doesn't have anymore.

Seventh, he has had the greatest influence, perhaps, in transforming how we talk about needless, endless foreign military incursions. He expresses in clear, succinct terms why America's global policeman role is getting to be untenable, as in his press conference after the raid on ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, when he stated, "But the United States taxpayer is not going to pay for the next fifty years (for endlessly staying in the region)."

One of his finer moments came when he mused movingly during a recent campaign rally about being present at Dover Air Force Base, seeing caskets return from war zones and witnessing the families' grief. Would that we have more commander-in-chiefs caring—and publicly at that—about dead American soldiers more than gallivanting around the Middle East looking for civil wars to support endlessly.

Eighth, he has challenged China, our most important geopolitical threat, and done what hasn't been attempted in our status quo politics so far.

Ninth, he says he's "president of America and not president of the world," and that American citizens have to be taken care of first before we take care of the world. What a novel idea. This should be said and practiced more often.

In a sane, common-sense world, Trump's recent United Nations address touting these ideas would be lauded; instead they were pilloried as isolationist and dangerous. But that is the cognitively dissonant media world we live in now—what is pragmatic is framed as radical and transgressive.

Tenth and lastly, I like his chutzpah and pugilistic style, with its underlying theme of "Honey Badger don't care." It's perfectly suited for this moment, where the overarching issue is: Who is really in charge in this republic, the voters or arrogant, unelected federal bureaucrats who think they know best and try to override the will of voters? He seems uniquely suited to take on the combined onslaught coming from many quarters.

Obviously, I don't like or agree with everything Trump has said and done. Equally obviously, he has moral and ethical failings like many in D.C., but with a difference: he's no hypocrite and has never pretended to be something he's not, which can't be said of his many critics and adversaries. But his flaws and missteps are small potatoes compared to the decades-long, monumental corruption and dishonesty of our ruling and media elite, and the contempt they have toward voters.

The most fun and illuminating part has been watching the mainstream media, academia, Hollywood, and the Democratic Party rip their tolerant masks off and show themselves for what they actually are: vicious, intolerant people who are dangerous when backed into a corner.

I'm now squarely in the camp who believes that Trump is alright, and that nothing he says or does is worse than what the ruling class and media elites do and are capable of. He is far better—or at least far less worse—than them. Truly, as someone said, the office sought the man.

Chapter 12 Democrat Media Lied To Their Base

Dems have been impeaching Trump since the Inauguration

On Sept 12, 2019, Tim Hains of Real Clear Politics posted about Rush Limbaugh: “Democrat Media Lied To Their Base About Trump For Three Years, Now Can't Deliver Impeachment.”

<https://www.realclearpolitics.com/video/2019/09/12>

Rush Limbaugh in many ways is the guiding light for conservatives and all things Trump. He sees the left for what it is—socialist anti-Americans plain and simple. Liberals and progressives would actually be shocked if they saw the inside pages of a real leftist playbook with names such as Marx, Engels, Stalin, Lenin, Trosky, and Mao highlighted. The left wants to defeat America by making the liberals and progressives do their dirty work for them. a Hains at the present time is convinced that Syndicated radio host Rush Limbaugh is 100% certain that the Dems cannot deliver on their sham impeachment scam. That also means that their left wing media leaders, aka, the media outlets like MSNBC, CNN, and the New York Times are now also unable to deliver on promises that President Trump would be impeached or removed from office. No matter what the left can guarantee, they continue to beat the hate drum and the idea that liberals and progressives must hate Donald Trump or give up their socialist cards is forever the first chorus of their rant.

RUSH: I'm not through with the impeachment business yesterday... Look, I want to expand if not just continue something... 'cause the latest ratings are in for MSNBC and CNN, and every rating period they lose another third. I mean, their audience has peaked. Well, CNN's never peaked very much. But PMSNBC, for about a two-month maximum period right in the middle of this whole collusion business — in some primetime hours — were beating Fox.

I mean, their audience was into this, and my point is the people driving this impeachment are left-wing base voters who were subjecting themselves to all of this media for over two years, and they were told every day, "Trump's gone." They were told every day, "Trump colluded." They were told every day, "Trump was a cheater." They were told every day that Trump colluded with Putin, that Trump stole the election. "Hillary was legitimate winner! Trump was not." They were told every day that Trump cheated, told every day that Trump was just the worst reprobate ever.

They believed it — and can you blame 'em? I mean, their media assured them of this. Now, they went into it believing it. I mean, they didn't need the media, but the media was reinforcement. This is one of the things that constantly amazes me. The media that has lied to and misled its entire audience has yet to apologize for it, has yet to ask any forgiveness, has yet to even explain it. They just move on to the next phony hoax, taking what's left of their audience with them.

But these people are imbalanced to begin with. They're liberals. They're not solidly put together. They're not mentally adjusted anyway — and then you lie to them every day and you build up their expectations that what they want most in the world, Trump in jail, is only a matter of time away from happening. And, folks, I don't know how many of you took the time to watch all that. I did. From the New York Times, to the Washington Post, to CNN, to MSNBC, they did everything but promise that Trump was guilty.

They did everything but promise they had the evidence! They lied to their audience! They assured them the evidence was there, and it was only a matter of time before it was produced. There were “experts” with credibility from former Obama administration intel officials to former FBI people. They were all over the place. They were being quoted in the New York Times. The New York Times! “The paper of record.” You couldn't blame those people for believing it, and they did.

To some point, they still think that it's true, that somebody just missed it. They think everybody — Mueller, the FBI, whoever — blew it! That's why they want impeachment to continue because they know that it's there! They've been told it was there. And the media that they watched and read have not told them that they were wrong. CNN has not said they were wrong about anything. The New York Times hasn't said they were wrong about anything.

The Washington Post hasn't said they were wrong about anything. They keep reporting on Trump as though he's guilty of everything they accused him of starting even before the election. Their media keeps lying to them, keeps misleading them. But now, I told you. I told you late last week and the beginning of this week that this is beginning to take its toll, that I don't care how mixed up these people are, there reaches a point where even they are gonna stop trusting these people and stop listening to them.

Especially if there's no apology, if there's no acknowledgment that we got it wrong. If they keep pummeling it, people can't hang on to this with that much passion and energy. It's just going to dwindle. It's gonna fritter away. There is now developing a larger mistrust of the media by the media's own audience, and I think you see it in these audience figures. "MSNBC and CNN lost nearly a third of their respective prime time audiences compared to this time last year." It was the same three months ago.

It is a constant decline to now, for CNN and MSNBC. Well, CNN never did have much of an audience outside the airports. They would top out at a million. MSNBC, at one point, had four or five million. They're down now to barely over a million. They've lost practically 80% of it. It is a continuous slide. I think what's worth noting is that the ratings for these outlets and the circulation and subscription sales for the New York Times, Washington Post and all that...

They were somewhat bucked up after Trump won. I mean, that was Panic City, and the media was trusted. They were gonna give 'em the dirt every day, gonna make sure Trump was gonna go, make sure Trump was gonna be found guilty, make sure Trump was gonna lose office. You had all those people in their vagina hats flocking wherever they could to get their daily therapy sessions. They'd go to Pravda, they'd go to MSNBC, and that's what it became! Left-wing lunatics looked at the media as their therapists!

Remember when John Kerry lost in 2004, and there were therapists that opened shop down here in South Florida that helped Democrats deal with the shock? Well, imagine this nationwide, and imagine MSNBC and CNN and the New York Times becoming therapists for these people. So you have a hysterical story, and it was filled with hysteria! "Trump colluded! Trump's an agent! Trump's a traitor! Trump sold out America! Hillary should have won!" Add it all up. It's hysteria — and hysterical story after hysterical story fell apart.

While at the same time, Donald Trump thrives in office. Donald Trump cuts taxes. Donald Trump initiates immigration reform. Donald Trump starts building the wall. Donald Trump gets a travel ban. Trump just keeps going! Trump starts talking to Kim Jong-un. Trump is in the trade war with the ChiComs to even out that playing field. So while these people are tuning into the media every day to hear how Trump is soon to be in jail, in reality Trump is thriving and he's tweeting and he's laughing at them.

He's mocking them — he's laughing at 'em to their faces — and they end up feeling tricked. These people, the Democrat base, have been lied to now for three years without an apology, without a mea culpa, without a “please forgive us,” without any acknowledgment that they've been lied to. The same people who told them it was a 90% certainty that Hillary would win in a landslide! The same people that published the polls that showed that Hillary was gonna win in a landslide.

The same people that told them that after Trump won, that he was gonna be removed, that he was gonna be taken out of office. The media is still lying to them. Are they are finally realizing it? I think they are. They're abandoning MSNBC in droves. They're abandoning CNN in droves. We know that the New York Times is gonna be the last to go if it goes at all because that's the paper of record.

I don't think the Times could do anything to mess up its credibility with these people, but others, I think it only makes sense. To answer the question, “What's he being impeached for?” These people who bought everything the media assured them are now demanding that somebody make it happen, somebody get rid of this guy. And it's fallen to Jerry Nadler, Jerry Nadler of the House Judiciary Committee. [And, more recently, shifty Adam Schiff of the House Intel Committee because Pelosi could not trust Nadler.]

But here's a story from the AP, ladies and gentlemen. “Some Democrats Concerned as Judiciary Sets Impeachment Rules.”

Now, this is a classic example of a story needing me to interpret it for you. ‘Cause this is in the weeds. It’s purposely in the weeds. This story is meant to get the facts out there but in a way most people won’t understand, so the AP can say that they did their job.

Let me spell out this story. The mainstream media are pretending, and their legal experts are pretending, not to understand why Nadler is proceeding with this. They don’t know why, they’re trying to tell us they don’t know why Nadler is going forward with his official impeachment hearings, because it makes no sense. It makes no sense to call a vote on this. It makes no sense for members of the House who won in 2018 from Trump districts, it makes no sense to put them on record here, and yet Nadler is [was] proceeding... {until Schiff took over all of a sudden.]

And so this story attempts to say that the media itself and their legal experts don’t understand why Nadler’s doing it, and that’s a farce because they support Nadler doing it. They just don’t want to admit that they support him doing it, either. The truth is that Nadler is proceeding and Pelosi is letting him proceed in the hopes — and that’s all they’ve got — in the hopes that this phony impeachment inquiry is gonna fool some Obama or Clinton judge out there into forcing Trump to turn over documents like his tax returns that are protected by separation of powers and executive privilege.

They’ve got nothing. They never have had anything. Trump hasn’t done anything that’s impeachable, never once. Mueller’s inquiry was to set up impeachment, and Mueller found nothing! There isn’t anything! They’re convinced that Trump did it nevertheless. They need his documents. So that’s the phase that we’re in now. And despite the media and some of these so-called moderate Democrats, of which there are none.

There are no moderate Democrats anymore. I don’t care what the media talks about, refers to them as such, they don’t exist. This story is about how some are concerned that Nadler’s going ahead with this when secretly they want him to. Now, under the Constitution and legal precedent, a president could only be forced to turn over these documents if he's under an official impeachment investigation.

If there is an official impeachment investigation, then the separation of powers gets a little blurry. And it's possible then that some deranged Obama judge could come along and grant Nadler's committee access to, say, Trump's tax returns. And that's what Nadler and Pelosi are now doing, and they're only doing it because they've got to keep their base on board for the 2020 election, and their base is losing its mind.

Again, sorry for being repetitive. Their base has been lied to for two and a half years. Their base has been assured Trump did it, that Trump's guilty. Everybody they trust has told them, from media to elected officials, so, by God, they want 'em to go do it. They want 'em to find the evidence and get rid of the guy. So the Democrats have to make a show of doing this, even though they know there's nothing here. They're not gonna get Trump's tax returns.

Nancy Pelosi, Nadler hope that some judge will come along and grant them access, as they continue to wail away that Trump needs to be impeached, needs to be removed from office. And if some judge would do that, then at that point Pelosi will announce the beginning of real impeachment proceedings. But not until. 'Cause there's no way there's gonna be a trial, and there's no way there's ever gonna be a conviction. So it's gonna be nothing more than a for-show exercise.

Let's go to audio sound bites. Here is Jerry Nadler this morning, Capitol Hill House Judiciary Committee hearing considering a resolution on procedures for impeachment hearings.

NADLER: This committee is engaged in an investigation that will allow us to determine whether to recommend articles of impeachment with respect to President Trump. That is what we are doing. Some call this process an impeachment inquiry. Some call it an impeachment investigation. There's no legal difference between these terms, and I no longer care to argue about the nomenclature. But let me clear up any remaining doubt. The conduct under investigation poses a threat to our democracy. We have an obligation to respond to this threat, and we are doing so.

RUSH: They can't name anything, but Trump's conduct poses a threat to our democracy. Here's Doug Collins, who is the ranking Republican on the committee.

COLLINS: We're so in fantasy land here, nobody knows what's going on. This is the problem. You just went back to what we said. Instagram, snapshot, Twitter, it doesn't matter. We're not in an impeachment inquiry!

RUSH: And we're not in one because there hasn't been a vote yet! Nadler's saying there is just to placate the lunatics on the left, but there isn't an official one yet, and there won't be unless some renegade judge clears the way for them to get Trump's tax returns or something like that.

BREAK TRANSCRIPT

RUSH: Grab sound bite number 13, Tom McClintock. This is another Republican reacting to the Jerry Nadler announcement that an "official" inquiry is underway. He doesn't care what you call it, they're doing it, and here... We had Doug Collins reacting to it basically saying (impression), "This is fantasyland. There's nothin' 'official' happenin' here. You're just tryin' to placate Twitter. You're trying to placate Instagram, Face Chat, InstantChat, whatever is, Mr. Chairman, but we know you got nothin'!" That was Doug Collins — a pretty good impersonation — and up next here's Tom McClintock with his take.

MCCLINTOCK: That's all you have to do! Resolve that the House authorizes the Judiciary Committee to conduct an inquiry into the impeachment of the president. It's that simple. I dare you to do it. In fact, I double-dog dare you to do it. Have the House vote on those 18 words and then go at it.

RUSH: Okay. Well, here's now audio sound bite 14. This is during the committee hearing considering the resolution on procedures for impeachment. This is after the vote, the chairman, Jerrold Nadler...

NADLER: The clerk will call the roll!

CLERK: Mr. Chairman, there are 24 ayes and 17 noes.

NADLER: Your ayes have it. The resolution is agreed to. This concludes our business for today.

RUSH: All right. So they're off and running. Pelosi really doesn't want this to happen; she could not stop it. So she's gotta make it look like she's on board — and I'm telling you, this is the inmates running the asylum. This is the Democrat base forcing it. Plus, Nadler is being primaried much the way Joe Crowley was primaried by Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, and he's got to try to protect his flank, and so that's that.

BREAK TRANSCRIPT

RUSH: Now, I want to go back for a moment to impeachment 'cause I've got some Pelosi sound bites, and I want to reiterate something about this. If you've done this yourself, if you've checked the news — if you paid any attention at all — you know that this entire procedure that Nadler was forced into doing, calling for a vote and having official inquiry or investigation... He doesn't want to argue about the nomenclature. The fact of the matter is everybody's calling this a circus. Everybody's calling it a joke. It has no aim. It has no objective. It doesn't look like it's organized. It doesn't have a central purpose other than to placate a bunch of malcontent voters.

And once again, I told you last week that the reason Pelosi doesn't want to vote on this is because of all of the Democrats that won in 2018 in Trump districts. You know, she doesn't care if Nadler blathers on about impeachment. If there's a vote, that puts people on the record — and there isn't a poll in America that shows anywhere near a majority of people want Trump impeached. So there's nothing in it for the Democrats to do this except for fundraising and to placate their base.

Pelosi has lost control of the situation, and you'll see references to these "moderate Democrats from Trump districts who want or don't want..." There aren't any moderate Democrats, folks. That's just media misdirection and obfuscation. There aren't any moderate Democrats. I mean, they're trying to claim that, you know, Biden is a moderate. Biden doesn't know what he is anymore! Biden is saying whatever he has to say to sound like he is on the same page as all these radicals, but he doesn't know what he is. By the way, these people have a debate tonight, don't they, Mr. Snedley? (interruption) That's right. It's in Houston.

The Democrats have a debate, and I guess Fauxcahontas is now the focus 'cause she's gonna be really going after Plugs. Kamala Harris is gonna be going after everybody because the bottom has fallen out of her campaign. So here is Pelosi. We have a couple of sound bites here starting at number 22. This was just this morning. She had her weekly press briefing. And reporter said, "Look, Madam Speaker, on the other topic of the day, impeachment, do you concede now that the impeachment inquiry into President Trump is underway?"

That had to be a good part of an hour on his show. I have the pleasure of listening to Rush Limbaugh every day from 12PM to 3PM. I learn an awful lot and I would recommend it for all. . I hope you enjoyed this Rush Breakaway.

Chapter 13 Why They Really Hate Trump

There is no hate ever shown at a Trump rally

The Real Reason They Hate Trump

He's the average American in exaggerated form—blunt, simple, willing to fight, mistrustful of intellectuals.

It's always a treat. The link to this article is as follows:

<https://www.wsj.com/articles/the-real-reason-they-hate-trump-1540148467>

It was written in 2018 on Oct 21, by columnist David Gelernter, just about a year before I found it for this book. The Trump hate is ongoing and has become an American phenomenon that must be fought by all Americans so that the orthodoxies of other countries do not infiltrate and take over the overriding principles of American democracy. Be cautious, please!

Six days on the Road and Trump is going to make it home to the family tonight.

This piece, which I will not edit—out of appreciation of the WSJ granting use permission, contains information of which I am close to 100% in accord. When appropriate in this story, which is one man's opinion, I will interject another man's opinion—mine—in italics after appropriate areas in the original text. There will be few intercessions.

The article, written one year ago was written right before the Democrats clobbered the Republicans, who had a lot of folks retire, and we are living through a like-hell Democrat majority today of new freshman members of Congress who are about to learn why their leader is condemning them to one term – the Trump Impeachment. Democrat constituents were not looking for politics but results and what they got was politics. So, we can expect a Republican majority in the House next time around, especially with this do-nothing-butimpeach-Trump Congress in charge of way too much for even Democrats to stomach.

In Oct 2018, David Gelerntner writes:

Every big U.S. election is interesting, but the coming midterms are fascinating for a reason most commentators forget to mention: The Democrats have no issues. The economy is booming and America's international position is strong. In foreign affairs, the U.S. has remembered in the nick of time what Machiavelli advised princes five centuries ago: Don't seek to be loved, seek to be feared.

The contrast with the Obama years must be painful for any honest leftist. For future generations, the Kavanaugh fight will stand as a marker of the Democratic Party's intellectual bankruptcy, the flashing red light on the dashboard that says "Empty." The left is beaten.

This has happened before, in the 1980s and '90s and early 2000s, but then the financial crisis arrived to save liberalism from certain destruction. Today leftists pray that Robert Mueller will put on his Superman outfit and save them again.

Of course the Mueller fiasco was a leftist ploy that was aided by the corrupt deep state and it failed predictably.

For now, though, the left's only issue is "We hate Trump." This is an instructive hatred, because what the left hates about Donald Trump is precisely what it hates about America. The implications are important, and painful.

Not that every leftist hates America. But the leftists I know do hate Mr. Trump's vulgarity, his unwillingness to walk away from a fight, his bluntness, his certainty that America is exceptional, his mistrust of intellectuals, his love of Occam's Razor—simple ideas that work, and his refusal to believe that men and women are interchangeable. Worst of all, he has no ideology except getting the job done. His goals are to do the task before him, not be pushed around, and otherwise to enjoy life. In short, he is a typical American—except exaggerated, because he has no constraints to cramp his style except the ones he himself invents.

Mr. Gelernter, I could not help but to add comment. What a magnificent paragraph. Bravo! I love it and you have captured some of the many reasons in that paragraph why regular Joe's not worth much more than their selves and their opinions absolutely love the current president of the United States of America... Go Trump!

Mr. Trump lacks constraints because he is filthy rich and always has been and, unlike other rich men, he revels in wealth and feels no need to apologize—ever. He never learned to keep his real opinions to himself because he never had to. He never learned to be embarrassed that he is male, with ordinary male proclivities. Sometimes he has treated women disgracefully, for which Americans, left and right, are ashamed of him—as they are of JFK, [Warren Harding] and Bill Clinton.

But, like those three, Trump should be forgiven for at least his missteps were not at a time while he was making major decisions in the White House.

But my job as a voter is to choose the candidate who will do best for America. I am sorry about the coarseness of the unconstrained average American that Mr. Trump conveys. That coarseness is unpresidential and makes us look bad to other nations. On the other hand, many of his opponents worry too much about what other people think. I would love the esteem of France, Germany and Japan. But I don't find myself losing sleep over it.

The difference between citizens who hate Mr. Trump and those who can live with him—whether they love or merely tolerate him—comes down to their views of the typical American: the farmer, factory hand, auto mechanic, machinist, teamster, shop owner, clerk, software engineer, infantryman, truck driver, housewife. The leftist intellectuals I know say they dislike such people insofar as they tend to be conservative Republicans.

Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama know their real sins. They know how appalling such people are, with their stupid guns and loathsome churches. They have no money or permanent grievances to make them interesting and no Twitter followers to speak of. They skip Davos every year and watch Fox News. Not even the very best has the dazzling brilliance of a Chuck Schumer, not to mention a Michelle Obama. In truth they are dumb as sheep.

Mr. Trump reminds us who the average American really is. Not the average male American, or the average white American. We know for sure that, come 2020, intellectuals will be dumbfounded at the number of women and blacks who will vote for Mr. Trump. He might be realigning the political map: plain average Americans of every type vs. fancy ones.

Many left-wing intellectuals are counting on technology to do away with the jobs that sustain all those old-fashioned truck-driver-type people, but they are laughably wide of the mark. It is impossible to transport food and clothing, or hug your wife or girl or child, or sit silently with your best friend, over the Internet. Perhaps that's obvious, but to be an intellectual means nothing is obvious. Mr. Trump is no genius, but if you have mastered the obvious and add common sense, you are nine-tenths of the way home. (Scholarship is fine, but the typical modern intellectual cheapens his learning with politics, and is proud to vary his teaching with broken-down left-wing junk.)

This all leads to an important question—one that will be dismissed indignantly today, but not by historians in the long run: Is it possible to hate Donald Trump but not the average American?

True, Mr. Trump is the “unconstrained” average citizen. Obviously you can hate some of his major characteristics—the infantile lack of self-control in his Twitter babble, his hitting back like a spiteful child bully—without hating the average American, who has no such tendencies. (Mr. Trump is improving in these two categories.) You might dislike the whole package. I wouldn't choose him as a friend, nor would he choose me. But what I see on the left is often plain, unconditional hatred of which the hater—God forgive him—is proud. It’s discouraging, even disgusting. And it does mean, I believe, that the Trump-hater truly does hate the average American—male or female, black or white. Often he hates America, too.

Granted, Mr. Trump is a parody of the average American, not the thing itself. To turn away is fair. But to hate him from your heart is revealing. Many Americans were ashamed when Ronald Reagan was elected. A movie actor? But the new direction he chose for America was a big success on balance, and Reagan turned into a great president. Evidently this country was intended to be run by amateurs after all—by plain citizens, not only lawyers and bureaucrats.

Those who voted for Mr. Trump, and will vote for his candidates this November [and next], worry about the nation, not its image. The president deserves our respect because Americans deserve it—not such fancy-pants extras as network commentators, socialist high-school teachers and eminent professors, but the basic human stuff that has made America great, and is making us greater all the time.

Mock us if you dare but America’s finest come from all strata of life. As an Information Technology Professor myself, I expected Mr. Gelerntner to be a petulant pedantic elite but he was none of those. He is a concerned American as I am. God bless you sir. Can the rest of us see why he is concerned about the people we put into office?

Chapter 14 Is Trump Cruising Toward Reelection?

There are more than four reasons why Trump is cruising toward re-election. We talk about four!

Anybody who witnesses a Trump rally leaves loving Trump even more

This post is from Cas Mudde @casmudde Thu 20 Jun 2019 07.05 EDT First published on Thu 20 Jun 2019 02.00 EDT

Thank you Cas for use of your post.

Democrats should not delude themselves: unless they shape up – and fast – the president is heading for four more years

<https://www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2019/jun/20/four-reasons-why-trump-is-cruising-towards-re-election>

The real Trump voter is left wanting – as is at times loudly proclaimed by their media voices like Ann Coulter and Tucker Carlson.’

On Tuesday night Donald Trump launched his re-election campaign with a by now classic rally in Orlando, Florida. It was a “greatest hits rally” in which he accused the Democrats of undermining democracy (by trying to impeach him), talked about the many threats to “this country as we know it”, and even railed against Hillary Clinton (for old time’s sake). In short, Trump’s message for 2020 is: “I made America great again, now vote for me so I can Keep America Great.”

Democrats will dismiss the speech as lacking ideas and just fearmongering, while reveling in recent polls that have virtually every major primary candidate defeat Trump in 2020, sometimes by a significant margin. They believe the president is weakened by a broad range of issues, including the Mueller report, the treatment of immigrants at the southern border and the various scandals surrounding key cabinet members.

Remarkably, given the traumatic experience of 2016, many Democrats have still not learned the key lesson of US democracy: elections are not won by passive majorities but by mobilized minorities. And while the passive majority might be with the Democrats, or at least not with Trump, the mobilized minority is. There are (at least) four reasons why, at this moment, Trump is cruising towards re-election.

Sign up with theguardian.com to receive the latest US opinion pieces every weekday.

The first reason is, of course, the economy. While we can argue about how meaningful and solid the current economic growth is, there is no denying that, in terms of the conventional economic indicators, the state of the US economy is excellent. Consequently, prediction models based primarily on economic indicators, which correctly predicted the 2016 elections, predict a resounding Trump victory in 2020.

[By the way, the Democrats and as Rush Limbaugh calls them “The Drive-By Media are doing their best to dissuade Americans suggesting our lying eyes care not telling us how bad things really are. Humph! The Buzz is that things are bad but then again, the reality is that they are very good. VP Pence had this to say recently in response to those who say don’t trust the good news: “Despite the irresponsible rhetoric of many in the mainstream media, the American economy is strong, and the U.S. economic outlook remains strong as well,” Pence told the group in Detroit Monday. “Now, last week, despite some volatility in global markets, leading retailers also reported strong sales and earnings, and consumer spending posted its strongest reading since March. And under President Trump’s leadership, as a son of the heartland myself, I couldn’t be prouder to say that the automotive industry is roaring back here in Michigan and all across the heartland.”]

Second, Trump has so far delivered to his non-traditional base. The average Republican, commonly referred to as the “moderate Republican”, is still not a fan of Trump, who is seen as too confrontational and vulgar, but got the one thing they care about: a tax cut. Scared of a “socialist backlash” within the Democratic party, they will come out to protect their new gains by voting Trump.

Similarly, the Christian right will once again come out strong. While the support for Trump by religious voters, puzzles liberals, it is pretty straightforward: the supreme court. Here, again, Trump has delivered. He has appointed two staunchly conservative anti-abortion judges to the supreme court, Neil Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh, and promised to appoint more. And with the possibility of (at least) one position possibly becoming vacant in the next presidential term, ie Ruth Bader Ginsburg (perhaps also Clarence Thomas), the Christian right mobilization will run on full cylinders again. The reward for the faithful: overturning Roe v Wade!

Finally, there is the real Trump supporter, the mostly blue-collar and lower-middle-class white voters who want to “build the wall” (nativism) and “drain the swamp” (populism). So far, they have not really gotten what they wanted. The swamp has barely been drained – rather, it has been expanded by corrupt Trump appointees – while, despite all of Trump's grandstanding, the wall is still mostly a fence-in-building. In short, the real Trump voter is left wanting – as is at times loudly proclaimed by their media voices like Ann Coulter and Tucker Carlson. But where can they go? To the most diverse party in US history? The party of Bernie Sanders, Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, Stacey Abrams and Elizabeth Warren?

Trump can rightly claim that he has done all he could to keep the wall on the political agenda and push through a brutal anti-immigration agenda

But maybe they will stay at home, disappointed? Not really. They have not been betrayed by Trump. He can rightly claim that he has done all he could to keep the wall on the political agenda and push through a brutal anti-immigration agenda. He will claim that he has been “sabotaged” by the “deep state” and their corrupt helpers in Congress (including “weak” Republicans). Hence, he needs a second term to break the last resistance so that he can make good on his promises.

Third, against this mobilized minority stands a majority of Americans unhappy with Trump but largely uninspired by the Democratic party. They see a party without a clear profile, divided over more than 20 primary candidates, who differ on more than they agree on. Moreover, with still some 500 days to go until election day, Democrats are already turning against each other – with anti-Sanders donors trying to co-opt candidates, while Democratic insiders are feuding with the Sanders camp, which is fundraising against the Democratic establishment.

All of this is putty in the hands of the Trump campaign, the fourth reason the president is set for re-election. As should be clear by now, Trump actually ran a good campaign in 2016 – clearly much better than Clinton, who misread the rust belt states, among others. Trump has been running a “permanent presidential campaign” since his inauguration, which has picked up financial steam more recently. The campaign has been raking in money by the tens of millions, including from key Republican campaigners and donors who had spurned him in 2016.

Trump may be historically unpopular, but he is popular enough to be (comfortably) re-elected. His supporters have agency and urgency, the two things the Democrats are still lacking. They have 400 days left to create this, together, rather than apart.

Chapter 15 God Gave Us Donald J. Trump

In many ways, this President is like a Prophet of Old

A president sent from God!

Trump was sent from God as the answer to deep, anti-establishment anger and discontent and as a beacon for goodness

From <https://www.charismanews.com/opinion/59307>

Common grace raises up unpredictable vessels

...

As time goes by, even while old time progressives, liberals and others attached to the hate-filled Democrat Party consume more leftist and media hate and spread it like it is the gospel, the religious in America among many faiths are finding something special in President Donald J. Trump. The section of charisma news that I cite below gives a great perspective on what has happened.

Trump falls into a unique category of individuals. These are men and women served up by the hand of providence. They are people whose singular strengths and convictions match a certain test in history—a crucible. As Churchill said, "All my life was a preparation for this moment." Figures like Margaret Thatcher, Patton, Churchill and Lincoln do not step out of cathedrals onto the stage of history, yet we canonize them later as the instruments raised up by God to meet a singular crisis.

Curiously many of these leaders were not the darling or favorite of contemporary Christians. Preachers thought Lincoln to be a godless skeptic; they stumbled over Winston's cigars and scotch; and they balked at Reagan's divorce and children from two marriages. Likewise, today's leading evangelicals have made their rejection of Trump public!

Strangely, while none of these instruments of "common grace" rose through the ranks of evangelicals, each of them ended up as a defender of Christian values. This came home to me in the most shocking way as I replayed Donald Trump, like the Scottish heir to John Knox as he shouted back to the Vatican, "I am a Christian and I'm proud of it!"

It reminded me of Churchill who early on framed the contest with Hitler as a "battle for the survival of Christian civilization" He even insisted "Onward Christian Soldiers" be sung on board the ship where he and Roosevelt forged their alliance against the Axis powers. Lincoln quoted the Bible more than any President, yet refused to join any established church.

The question a Christian needs to ask, especially when their favorite candidate fails to get the nomination, is not, "Who is the most Christian?" Instead ask, "Who is the one anointed for the task?"

Trump Has the Cyrus Anointing

Common grace tells us that God acts in history in unusual ways to raise up unlikely deliverers for the sake of His purposes and His people. He disrupts nomination processes. In 1860, the pious evangelical Salmon P. Chase was a better Christian than the men he ran against, but the wily Lincoln got the nomination on the third ballot. Chase could not understand why God had denied him, but in the end the Springfield lawyer proved to be the most suitable vessel for the coming chaos.

From my perspective, there is a Cyrus anointing on Trump. He is as my friend Kim Clement said three years ago: "Gods Trumpet." I predicted his nomination and I believe he is the chaos candidate set apart to navigate us through the chaos that is coming to America. I think America is due for a shaking regardless of who is in office. I believe the 45th President is meant to be an Isaiah 45 Cyrus. With him in office, we have an authority in the Spirit to build the house of the Lord and restore the crumbling walls that separate us from cultural collapse; even then, this national project is likely to be done as Daniel prophesied, "in times of trouble" (Dan 9:25).

People keep asking me: "Is Trump a Christian?"

Let's remember, as much as 70% of Americans self-describe as "Christians." These include Catholics, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and Lutherans. Within the total population, 30% say they have encountered Christ in a "born again" experience. There are many who believe they are Christians who do not use our language. Are they trying to deceive us? No.

While meeting, Trump exposed something about himself. It happened when he revealed how he views himself in contrast to pastors and clergy. Tapping his Bible, he said, "Look, I freely admit that while you all were pursuing a higher calling I was running around building buildings and making money." It beckons back to an earlier time in American life when "men of the cloth" were held in higher esteem.

Notice that he considers the work of ministry a "higher calling" than what he was doing when he made his billions. In some ways, this was a humbler admission than most people of wealth and affluence ever make.

Donald Trump may be shrewd but in matters regarding his faith he possesses the self-conscious candor of a man who knows he falls short but who fundamentally shares the same beliefs.

The genuineness of this connection was on full display in the acceptance speech he delivered in Cleveland where he thanked evangelicals and in a rare moment of emotional vulnerability spoke off script saying, "I don't know that I deserve it." This one moment reveals the true heart of the man.

America the fortunate

Back in 2016, when Hillary Clinton promised four more years of Obama, I knew that I would do whatever I could to help somebody else become president. Donald Trump was not my favorite in the beginning, but he soon became my favorite as I learned that he would not be pushed around by anybody. I like to call my reaction to Trump as a "breath of fresh air."

If CNN is hammering you every day that Trump is the devil incarnate, you won't reach the same conclusion. Turn them off. They are bad for your sense of goodness. When I finally understood Mr. Trump, it was because I had done my own thinking and had no room for the negative opinions of a corrupt press.

To support him in his candidacy, in addition to sending in some checks and attending rallies, I wrote at least ten books and a number of letters to the editor in support of the Trump presidency. I gave my books away to anybody who wanted one and brought them to biker rallies such as one up above Scranton, PA in Dalton to distribute. Amazon.com/author/brianwkelly

At this rally sponsored by Chris Cox and the Bikers for Trump, I put a bunch of books out to help the cause. My most popular Trump for President book was about 240 pages and it was titled Why Trump? I also wrote a bunch of books about how I believed Trump would govern. One of them was called Saving America The Trump Way, and a good part of the precepts defined in this book are being implemented or are being planned in the Trump Administration. No, I do not think that he read my book but heck, maybe he did.

Once Trump got elected, I knew I needed to help explain the phenomenon of his election, and I produced a book titled, "Why Trump Got Elected!" In many ways, that book is a follow-up to that popular book, Why Trump?

To show how I really felt about the Trump candidacy and to help others see things differently from what appeared to be the mainstream thought. I sent the following letter to the local paper, The Citizens' Voice. I titled it God gave us Donald Trump. I did not treat that notion lightly. I later wrote a whole book about it, the cover of which is proudly displayed on the next page The published essay is short, so I have included it below. :

There are many billionaires who want things their way on taxes and they figure they will benefit if their lobbyists get to the right politician. Donald Trump is actually running for office as a billionaire. He does not need a job. Yet, he is investing a lot of time in America. He does not need it. But, if he is successful, his kids will grow up in America and he wants it to be the finest country of any possible country ever. Bravo, Donald Trump.

Mr. Trump wants it to be like the America as founded by honest founders. Donald Trump is intrinsically honest. He may round up on some issues in his favor, but he is not corrupt. He wants his kids to love him and respect him just like you want your kids to think of you.

God Gave US Donald Trump !!!

Sent from God as the answer to deep anti-establishment anger and discontent and as a beacon for goodness.

Essay Continued:

We are only on Earth for a short time. Why should we not do our best? I love that Donald Trump, a billionaire who needs me like a hole in the head, thinks I matter. He thinks you matter. He thinks America matters. He thinks God matters. He is right on all points. Unlike you and me, he has the means and the opportunity to really show God and his family what a good man he really is.

We have been waiting for you, Mr. Trump, since Ronald Reagan left us. God gave us Donald Trump.

I am convinced that it is up to us to make him our president. We did not know how bad the Bushes were until they went into their recent crying tantrum because they lost. We just know that they were not too good when they had the power.

Donald Trump is bombastic, arrogant when he knows he is right, and he is often inartful in his speech when he is upset. However, he, like my father, is a very good man. I welcome the opportunity to cast my vote for him. I thank God for the opportunity.

Brian W. Kelly

May 17 2017 Mueller to March 27 2019

After that little piece ran in the Citizens' Voice, nobody had to guess which candidate I was endorsing.

Like many others, I welcomed a change to times in which America was heralded and not put down. I longed for a period in which the Democrat Party and its minions would not parade around the world apologizing for America and Americans. As I saw Donald Trump, mostly on the US stage, giving his speeches and talking about making America great again, I was very encouraged. I wanted somebody who finally was ready to put America and Americans first.

Yet, I was ever fearful that the corrupt press would try to slant the opinion of many Americans to favor Mrs. Clinton over the bombastic Trump. That is exactly what they did—as if they were a branch of the

Ironically, after expressing outrage that Trump would not commit to accepting quietly the results of the election, at one of his debates, Hillary vowed that she would abide by the results. Trump won the election by a landslide other than those in California (many illegal aliens). Trump was declared the winner but Hillary Clinton did not accept that. She and her cohorts have been trying to upset the results of the election for three years. The latest Democrat ploy is impeachment.

For three years plus, in fact since Trump came down the escalator announcing he was running, he has been the object of fake news, and plots and lies put out to bring him down. The Democrats and the fake news media led by The NY Times and CNN are the perpetrators. Gentleman George Bush would already have given up and asked them to put him in jail—please. He couldn't handle anything close to what Trump puts up with.

President Trump not only fights back. He beats them because he knows their secrets better than they know their own. After surviving the attack by the Deep State, he survived the big hoax of the Mueller Report. He continually fought the disgraced Mueller Report while in progress and then when presented, he made Mueller look like an old man taking a last gasp at fame. Mueller looked like a fool compared to Trump. It was Donald Trump who announced that the Russia Hoax is dead!"

The Mueller Report was authorized by James Comey's leftovers and a crooked Rod Rosenstein and it should not have been authorized in the first place. It was written as nastily as possible by 13 angry Democrats who were true Trump Haters, including highly conflicted Bob Mueller himself, who in his last public appearance looked more defeated than the pompous ass he was during the investigation.

As Trump predicted: No Collusion, No Obstruction! Trump tweeted this on the morning of his vindication and he is 100% right. Now, AG Barr and company are in the process of getting the perpetrators of the scam. There will be major weeping and gnashing of teeth.

But Democrats never learn. They are still upset that Hillary lost. So, the sore losers will never give up. Hook or crook, and mostly crook and fraud and fake news, they vow to take Trump down. After mini ventures come by and are shot down, they finally have another they claim is the big one. Now it's the whistleblower and the Ukraine. You know the plot. It is fake news and fake Democrat hearings that are leading to Democrat impeachment of the President which of course will never happen

Just as Nancy Pelosi announced there would be an impeachment vote in the House before the end of October 2019, Andrea Mitchell's interview threw a keg of cold water on the idea that this would take the Dems any further than the 22 month long Mueller hoax.

Former NBC anchor Tom Brokaw said Tuesday in the last week of October that Democrats don't have "the goods" on President Trump in their impeachment push the way they did during the Watergate investigation that led to former President Nixon's resignation in 1974.

Brokaw told MSNBC's Andrea Mitchell that House Democrats "don't have the same kind of clarity" that Congress did during Watergate "because it was so clear that these were criminal acts he was involved in."

Mitchell concurred that there's no evidence yet on par with Nixon's Oval Office tapes that showed Nixon was involved in the Watergate coverup. The tapes were considered a "smoking gun" in the investigation.

Let's just say that like the Russia Hoax and the Mueller Hoax, the Ukraine Hoax and the Impeachment Hoax have the same likelihood for success. Shame on Hillary for lying and the Democrats for trying one hoax after another to get rid of the duly elected president.

Chapter 16 Trump Hate & God Hate—A Dem Phenomenon?

Sure seems like a lot of people in a lot of places love Trump

Democrats brew more hate every day

As a sideshot of hating Trump, in this chapter, we briefly explore the seemingly recent Democrat hate for God. You may say, “that’s a stretch!” But, it is not. Look around. Moreover, it has nothing to do with Trump being God-like. On the last point, I am sure all agree. However, Democrats who believe that God also loves Donald Trump may find that as just another reason of many reasons to hate Trump.

It is tough to consider the idea of Dems hating God in a vacuum without considering Trump in the equation. Independent of Trump, there are many reasons why Democrats may hate God including the obvious that many Democrats are atheists. But facts are facts and so, another big reason in the last three years according to a number of popular preachers has something to do with God selecting Donald Trump to save America and Americans.

By now, those of us who like what Trump is doing for America know that Mr. Trump was sent from God and by God as the peoples' answer to deep anti-establishment anger and discontent and also as a beacon for goodness. Since Democrats hate Trump, having God as the reason for Trump is reason enough for Democrats to hate God.

Millions of Americans, declared Dallas megachurch pastor Robert Jeffries in 2017, believe the election of President Trump represented God giving us another chance--perhaps our last chance to truly make America great again. Our job was to elect him once God showed us the way. We thank Our Lord to this day that we did. You can bet than any Democrat listening to Jeffries was seething.

Christian Leaders prophesied before the election that God had raised up Donald Trump to lead the nation through a time of crisis.

This naturally gave Democrats another reason to hate God because as the world knows, they already hate Trump. Donald Trump got elected because someone such as God or a legion of Guardian Angels whispered the right stuff into the individual ears of millions of Americans. The voice(s) said that together in the 2016 election, the people would make a difference, and then God gave Donald Trump to America to be that difference.

The people trusted this self-made Billionaire to do what was best for America and not the bidding of slimy politicians or political donors and hacks. This drove Democrats and allies in the Swamp nuts and it caused intense hate for Trump among them all.

The Democrats and the establishment also began to stoke up their hate for the people who supported Trump—the ne'er-do-wells from the basket of deplorables. So, the Democrats have a trifecta going in this order:

1. They hate everybody that does not hate Trump
2. They hate Trump
3. They hate God

Most Trump supporters have a religious connection to God and so the hate for God became widespread among the Democrats.

For the people looking for an end to liberal and progressive and leftist rule, Donald Trump was the only candidate for president who offered Americans a breath of fresh air. The people had had enough of the stodgy, bossy, establishment elites in both the Democratic and Republican Parties.

Trump defies the status quo of rich donors controlling the government for their personal benefit. Donald Trump became a great gift from God himself. As the hate for Trump began to heat up and boil over, the Democrat hate for God increased concurrently.

Everybody who is anybody admits that there are very few Republican atheists or perhaps better said, atheist Republicans. If you find an atheist Republican, there is speculation that you will have discovered a combination that seems so rare, it could be covered by the Endangered Species Act. So, in terms of Republicans hating God, it is not worth the effort to study. Look on the other side of the aisle.

As far as Democrats' hating God, there are many reasons why this has happened. For example, Democrats are significantly more likely to be atheists than Republicans or the rest of the American population. We do know that they not only exist, atheist Democrats exist in some level of abundance.

Moreover, for some unexplained reason, in addition to being non-believers, many atheists express a strong hatred of God. Thus there is a likelihood that an atheist Democrat would, by definition, hate God.

Nonetheless, to some this is very clear, but to those who study matters such as this, they are at a loss to explain the phenomenon of an atheist hating God. Yet, they do and all you have to do is check the atheist blogs such as commonsenseatheism.com.

Here is the conundrum. How can you hate someone you don't believe in? Is that not a puzzlement? Why should you feel any hostility? If God really does not exist, would it not be expected that atheists would just relax and seek a good time before they become digested by the soil at life's end?

In other words, to an atheist, why should it matter if people believe in God? Carrying this to a logical conclusion would be that if atheism is true, then nothing matters.

Aldous Huxley (1894-1963) was a major English writer, novelist, and philosopher. He is the brother of the atheistic evolutionist Sir Julian Huxley, and the author of the highly read novel A Brave New World. He advocated a drug-fueled utopia and had some similarities of thinking to his brother Julian. In his writings, Aldous Huxley offers some reasons for his anti-Christian stance:

“I had motive for not wanting the world to have a meaning ... the philosophy of meaninglessness was essentially an instrument of liberation, sexual and political.”

Huxley had little interest in moral constraints. Many who hate God want nothing to do with constraints. They would prefer a world in which they can make up their own rules or have no rules at all. If God does not exist, why not have it your way?

Experts have concluded that the secret to their unhappiness as atheists is that they are uncertain of their beliefs. How can we know anything about a subject that is virtually impossible to definitively prove or disprove?

So, in frustration perhaps, they hate God and Christians because they have no concrete level of confidence that God does not exist. Moreover, they can be jealous of Christians who find solace in their belief of God.

Seeing Christians must remind them to some extent that they are suppressing the truth. Recent work by students of atheism, present arguments that there are far more non-believers in God in the modern era than ever before.

What does it mean if we find that 69 percent of Americans say a belief in God is an important part of being American? What about the other 31%?

Recent surveys have found that only one-in-ten Americans say that they do not believe in God. Less than that, a paltry 3 percent identify as atheist. However, there is always a new study when data is inconclusive and/or changing. I found such a new study does suggest that the true number of atheists could be much larger than 3%, perhaps even 10 times larger than previously estimated.

The fact that the study of God and the study of no-God (atheism) is ongoing means that the analysts must do their work in a condition of flux. Additionally as more researchers take up the mission, their various methods will differ as will their results.

In this book, we explore the why of a well-studied phenomenon—the hate of Trump. Our reporting is on Democrats and a major premise is that there are so many who hate Trump, that is not outlandish to generically conclude that Democrats hate God.

There are a number of sources for example that tell a story about 29% of Americans who identify themselves as Democrat. Similar sources conclude that 66% of atheists identify as Democrat. Working through all the analysis and theories by the numbers, a popularly accepted percentage of atheists in America is 3.1% of the population. But admittedly today this may be off by a factor of 10. Thus these are all theories and their basis is as solid as mush. But let's carry this math a bit further.

Since $2/3$ (66%) of the atheists are Democrats, that means that $(3.1 \times 0.666 =) 2.066\%$ of the population is both Democrat and atheist. And so, if 2.066% of the population are atheist Democrats and 29% of the population are Democrats, that would mean that $(2.066 / 29 =) 0.07126$ or 7.126% of Democrats are atheist. Of course as in all imperfect research, that conclusion may not be right.

When credible sources such as the Pew Research Center think 9% of the population meets the technical definition of being an atheist, this would make 20.69 percent of self-identifying Democrats--what might be called “definition atheists”.

How do you know when you hate someone? In my book, The Cure for Hate !!!, I explore the idea of hate quite extensively. The fact is that when you hate someone, you tend to speak evil of them, say negative things about them, call them names, accuse them of bad stuff, etc. Verbal condemnations reveal how a person feels about someone, so once a dialogue begins, the hate typically flows. This is often manifested in the hate Democrats outwardly show for President Trump.

Not all atheists react in the same way. Therefore, these are simply my personal generalities. However, those with much experience in such analysis would conclude that an atheist’s regular condemnation of God, their accusations of his immorality, speaking evil of him, etc., clearly demonstrates that they hate God. And, a super majority of Democrat atheists hate God. I would say with that, I have proven my thesis and that is why Democrats hate God. Throwing Trump in the mix as a person who recently began to love God, makes the hate for Trump even stronger. ”.

What about Democrat non-atheists? Do they hate God?

It depends!

The hate for God of Democrat atheists is not necessarily the same type of hate as Democrat non-atheists. Those Democrat non-atheists who hate God certainly have God tucked way back in their minds. They do not profess atheism but they are also not too inclined about hanging out in the church basement for a Sunday Social, so they can mingle with other “believers.” In fact, they are not inclined to be church goes at all. We might conclude that they hate God simply because HE is in the way.

To Trump lovers, we believe that one of the most recent good things that has happened to America is that God intervened and gave us all another chance. He sent his beloved Son over two thousand years ago and though that helped, just recently, God saw that things do not stay right in mankind for too many years at a time.

This time, he found a playboy rogue out in the fields of fun and prosperity in America and he let this rogue know that he had a big job for him. Donald Trump, who did not need God's job offer as life was treating him good already, chose to accept the offer and he ran for President of the US and now he is here with us and we better not blow this opportunity to do the right thing for God. Stop the hate!

Ironically, the person sent to America to help stop the hate and turn our country into something that as in the days of the founders could be great again, has seemingly caused more hate than any mere mortal would have ever imagined. God had to know the hate was coming but he hoped we would all figure out how to contain the hate and assure that the gift from God himself, Donald J. Trump Jr. would be used to gobble up the hate and help set America on a course to be great again, both in material ways and spiritual ways.

Many Americans, like perhaps our gift from God himself, Donald J. Trump, a normal human being blessed by his father, Fred Trump, and our Father, God, with an awful lot, have not focused on spiritual things in quite a while. Some, like Trump, in the days prior to God whispering in his ear that he needed him (Trump) to Save America, may have figured that there were no prizes on the spiritual side. But, that is not true.

Chapter 17 Conservatives Are Mad as Hell from All the Hate.

I'm Mad as Hell!

Conservatives do not need a census to know that most reporters and editors are hateful, miserable liberal progressives or simply hard-leftists looking for a conservative to hate. There is a Pew Research Center poll out that discovered that liberals outnumber conservatives in the media by some 5 to 1, and that is lower than I would conclude from my own experience. It gets to you when every thought you hear in the media is liberal and hateful and mostly untrue.

However, for liberals, they think they should be excused because it is not their individual fault. When everyone else around you as you write the news is full of hate against whitey, for example, it is easy to be sucked into the chasm of group hate on what stories are important, what sources are legitimate and what the narrative of the day should be. For conservatives, whatever the progressive corrupt media chooses to write is going to make us mad as hell. We can all be sure of that.

The corrupt mainstream media has decided to be a branch of the leftist Democratic Party and in its greatest potential act of pure hate, its mission so to speak—is to remove President Donald Trump from Office—the quicker the better. They don't really care whether America was or is great as long as nobody can credit Trump with making it great or greater or great again.

Their new mantra is “no credit, no way, no how, for Trump.” If Trump found a full cure for AIDS, the media and the Democrats would find a way to deny him his due praise. Intrinsicly we all know that without having seen those marching orders in print. It is how it is.

Fake news from CNN and MSNBC and the New York Times along with gratuitous lies, are the media weapons of choice and they have a huge following of lefty-type people, including Andrew Cuomo-loving millennials. They enjoy the camaraderie of hate with the Governor, while they are enjoying their work of attempting to depose our duly elected president by hook or by crook.

Though most Americans are not privileged, the media and the Democratic leadership and a large part of the Republican Establishment enjoy the fruits of political greed and the full benefits of all the hate within the “Swamp.” It's been like that for too many years to expect that anything, the purpose of which is the good of the country, would have any meaning to them.

The daily soap opera of hate promulgated by this nasty press every day spews vile on the President and tries to convince weak-minded Americans that by jumping on their negative train, they can gain back the great times from the last eight great Obama years. The press is actually worse than the far left in trying to persuade Americans to give up the Constitution and bring in a socialist regime.

Fixthisnation.com began their explanation for a new White House set of talking points intended to fight the fake news and it is the perfect way to discuss the idea about hate in America and there might be a chance to cure it. Why? Because like everything including the fake Russia collusion soap opera, or the Ukraine impeachment soap opera, the press and of course Adam Schiff tell one fat hate-filled lie after another.

MSNBC and CNN are the big culprits, but the disingenuous pedantic New York Times is not far behind in the lying category. So far, other than lefties, Americans are not buying what they are selling and that is good for the country.

“The White House often issues talking points to allies in the Republican Party— talking points that are almost certainly going to be ignored by politicians who refuse to stand up to the media’s ideological tyranny. As far as the mainstream right is concerned, President Trump is completely toxic at this point. Mainstream right, of course is a new synonym for Never Trumpers and / or the SWAMP. Yes, Virginia, Republicans can be corrupt too if their purpose is to hurt Donald Trump.

Trump’s lineage is off because at one time like most Americans, he worked for a living. So, like rats from a sinking ship, Republicans of the “Never Trump” variety have been doing everything they can to distance themselves from the president, as if he REALLY IS the neo-Nazi, white supremacist that the liberal media insists that he is.

Every now and then a former RINO realizes this is not good and goes back to loving conservatism, but most have kept their new orthodoxy enjoying their fame of Never-Trumpers.” Mitt Romney is the poster child and for me, he is the throw-up boy as that’s what I want to do any more every time I see him.

Nonetheless the Trump faithful who go to the rallies or watch the rallies know that it’s just the media lying once again in an attempt to smear all of conservatism with the same racist brush. People who know people love what Donald Trump is doing for America. Hate and Trump do not go together. Democrat lying and Trump hate however, are a perfect match.

Many of us recall both of the Charlottesville Fake News Fiascos. “The president, said one set of issued talking points, were entirely correct – both sides of the violence in Charlottesville acted inappropriately, and bear some responsibility.” The memo went on to encourage Republicans to remind the press that Trump used “no ambiguity” in condemning the white supremacist groups that gathered for the rally at UVA and in the Town Square the next day. The White House asked allies to present President Trump as “a voice for unity and calm” and a leader “taking swift action to hold violent hate groups accountable.”

The President is the President of all America but the corrupt press has a mission to tell the people something else. Remember, no credit and no good news about Trump, period. And every chance the press gets, including Charlottesville, they whack him with full blows.

Trump took the weekend violence in Charlottesville differently than the press said he should have so he had to have a redo the Monday afterwards:

President Donald Trump speaks about the deadly white nationalist rally in Charlottesville, Va., Monday, Aug. 14, 2017, in the Diplomatic Room of the White House in Washington

We will be discussing economic issues in greater detail later this afternoon, but based on the events that took place over the weekend in Charlottesville, Virginia, I would like to provide the nation with an update on the ongoing federal response to the horrific attack and violence that was witnessed by everyone.

I just met with FBI director Christopher Wray, and Attorney General Jeff Sessions. The Department of Justice has opened a civil rights investigation into the deadly car attack that killed one innocent American, and wounded twenty others. To anyone who acted criminally in this weekend's racist violence, you will be held fully accountable. Justice will be delivered.

As I said on Saturday, we condemn in the strongest possible terms this egregious display of hatred, bigotry and violence – it has no place in America. And as I have said many times before, no matter the color of our skin, we all live under the same laws. We all salute the same great flag, and we are all made by the same almighty God. We must love each other, show affection for each other and unite together in condemnation of hatred, bigotry and violence. We must rediscover the bonds of love and loyalty that bring us together as Americans.

Racism is evil, and those who cause violence in its name are criminals and thugs, including the KKK, neo-Nazis, white supremacists and other hate groups that are repugnant to everything we hold dear as Americans. We are a nation founded on the truth that all of us are created equal. We are equal in the eyes of our creator, we are equal under the law and we are equal under our constitution. Those who spread violence in the name of bigotry, strike at the very core of America.

As Americans have begun to discern, the press is not only anti-Trump, they are anti-American, and they lie like the Devil to try to suck weaker Americans, especially fragile millennials, into their doomsday party of hate. Many Americans are fed up with the intentional distortions of the news and simply can't take it anymore.

I can't take it anymore

Do you remember back in November 1976 when Howard Beale, as played by Peter Finch, the long-time anchor in the movie "Network

News,” gets the bad news that eventually caused him to utter one of the most famous movie lines of all time? Beale gets fired and was given two weeks. The long-time anchor had a very poor reaction to this personal news and he could not control himself during the next broadcast. He "went off the deep end."

He promised to commit suicide on the air. The company immediately fires him—no second chances for a repeat performance. Beale was devastated and remorseful. He begged for the opportunity to say good-bye to his fans with dignity, and he was given his last opportunity ever for air time so that he could say his good-by's respectfully and also apologize. Nobody expected it to happen, but Beale got his chance, and it was billed as a last chance.

Despite his promises, once on the air, Beale became overwhelmed by his circumstance. He went into another diatribe starting off with a rant claiming that "Life is bullshit." He was so passionate that his ratings spiked as he persuaded his viewers to shout out of their windows: "I'm as mad as hell, and I'm not going to take this anymore!" Like the shot at Lexington and Concord, this is the line heard 'round the world.

Well, my fellow Americans, I bet you saw this coming, and I am going to deliver it as passionately in words as I can: "I am mad as hell, and I am not going to take this anymore." I bet you are too. Let me remind you of why you are so upset.

The hate today is at peak—especially the left's hate for the President. Besides the CNN, MSNBC, and New York Times hate for Trump, there are other issues that sour our citizens. Taxes are too high; elected officials are crooked and out of touch; government is too big; spending is out of control, the Obamacare program is still a big train wreck. To top that, heroes are still dying in the VA system,

The people know that the federal government has been incompetent and for eight years before Trump, and now three with Trump, the left-wing news outlets purposely fail to report the truth about the corrupt and incompetent government full of Obama holdovers. We the common citizens have had no voice in our own government before Trump was elected; too many people are too lazy to hold government accountable, and too many of our finest local politicians are on the take. Only you and I can bring this back to being OK, but not by sitting on our duffs and letting the hate mongers and fomenters win the day.

Our country, run by this government has been schizoid and when they ran in 2016, Hillary Clinton, and Bernie Sanders promised to keep the country derailed for another eight years. They loved how things were. The people did not like it and that is why our President is now Donald J. Trump. Trump put it all back together and the trains are back on the tracks, but CNN and MSNBC and the New York Times hate him for it and they would rather see a disaster than President Trump getting any credit for saving America.

Corporate leaches and leakers full of hate for our duly elected President have infiltrated our government in some new organism called The Deep State. We are just getting over eight years of record unemployment while, thanks to Democrats, illegal aliens are still smiling as they take many American jobs. We have an unsustainable status quo with special interests having priority over the people's interests. Democrats fight Trump every chance they get to keep things the way Obama left them.

When we look to the future we see a public education system that creates more dummies than smart people. They are so dumb they think socialism is a good thing. Yes, these dummies are so dumb that they don't seem to mind being called dummies. Scrooge could have come up with an even more devastating term than "Bah Humbug." It's that bad! Can't you feel it? Nobody seems to think the country is doing well spiritually though, thanks to the president, the economy is booming.

Before Trump began putting us on the right track, we had the poorest economy since the depression with excessive welfare and income redistribution, institutionalized lying, a corrupt press carrying water for government, a debt large enough to kill America, huge student debt stopping graduate's success. We had tyranny v democracy, government lawlessness, freedom and liberty were in jeopardy, American stagnation was prevalent, and America through many Obama apologies had lost world prestige.

Why we have not regularly heard about this is because we have the most corrupt press since Gutenberg finally got his mechanical printing invention working. The American media in all forms works hard to propagandize all aspects of American life while championing the liberal leftist progressive wing of the Marxist / Communist oriented new Democratic Party.

Before Trump, our big government became such a problem that it chooses not to help with a solution. Yet the leftist press wants to return to those bad days by ousting Trump from office simply because they hate him because he beat them and their surrogate, Hillary Clinton. Trump gave them a huge and unexpected loss. So, they never talk about his fine accomplishments even though it should be the top news of the day. No wonder Trump and many others see their kind of news as “fake news.”

Our finest hope, our youth; go through colleges with socialist / communist administrators and professors in huge numbers to ultimately become unemployed and sacked with debt. Why can't they get jobs? Illegal foreign nationals are given jobs right out of college and graduate school because the perception is that white graduates already have it made. Really!

The out of touch hate-filled coffee-breath professors have convinced our mush-minded millennials that being unemployed is the norm though their parents sent them to school because they believed that the American Dream was the norm. It was. But, no longer! Today's millennials do not believe in the American Dream or any dreams because their elitist professors hate America and they lecture accordingly.

The student loan burden prevents borrowers from buying homes, cars, and having a family. As many as 48 million student loan borrowers are too broke to engage in life. Coffee breath professors tell them that is OK. So what if they never will be well-to-do? College loans, instead of lifting people to the top, have created a new race to the bottom,

On the International stage, thanks to our elected government, America in the Obama years was known as a bad actor. Before Trump, nobody was giving America a standing ovation as our president continually apologized for America's past. Nobody was asking the US for curtain calls. Our leaders before Trump had turned their backs on our friends and they were paying homage to our enemies. Too many holdovers are still hanging around and creating trouble for Trump.

Nightclubs in Orlando created major carnage while, so as not to offend the new religion of acceptability in the US, the government blamed Christians and guns rather than the work of an ISIS terrorist, the hate mongering perpetrators of the atrocity.

A church is attacked by a deranged killer in Texas and Democrats don't want to hear that he lied about his dishonorable discharge and under current law should not have been permitted to buy any gun. Instead of hating conservatives and the second amendment, why would Democrats not try to treat people who are mentally ill?

Before Trump, smaller and weaker countries such as Russia, Iran, and North Korea pushed US around and laughed at US, and our only response was to see if somehow, we may have offended them. For me, these were the worst days of America that I have ever witnessed, and the leadership and our government at the time seemed to be OK with being mediocre, instead of being outstanding.

Our previously elected government had trained us not to fight the bad guys. Wimps and pure traitors from the Swamp still control the Congress and the Republicans may have won the Senate but they continue fail to lead and to fulfill their promises to those who put them in office. Mitt Romney, Susan Collins, and Lisa Murkowski are simply disgusting—no other word needed.

If you have been paying attention, and I sure hope you have been as it is a civic duty, you know that there are even more issues than the exhaustive list we just walked through. Isn't that a shame on US? I think that is why you bought this book. Thank you very much. We do not have to be filled with such hate, but we must recognize its existence.

We are on the same side, and together we can all help. Good conservatives who are married to liberals have found their peace with each other. It is not to convince the other side but to simply never discuss the issue that divides.

If you have friends who are liberal / leftist, and they still talk to you, do not be quiet. Do not be quiet in public spaces. Instead, talk about all the hate all the time until it makes us too sick. The hate mongers win when America is quiet about the issues. People should not be afraid to discuss any topic in the US—ever. Know that as of today it is OK to talk politics at family dinners unless we are ready to give our country to those who do not deserve it. Start by talking after dinner and make it a little dose at a time. Don't get angry, and try to control hate.

We first must understand what is going on and we then must understand our rights. Even before you and me and everybody else are on board, we must start the first wave of solutions like Beale, by opening our windows all the way and shouting as loud as we can—yes, just like Howard Beale—so all of the government perpetrators in Washington can hear us well: “I am mad as hell, and I am not going to take this anymore.”

Then, we must make sure that we talk to everybody we can out there that we know—other people like you and I and others, and let's help them know that unless we all fully engage in America, when we wake up from our deep fog, there may be no America left for our progeny. We will have blown it for sure. We must try every day to get those that harbor so much hate for our President and for America to stop the hate and begin again to love their fellow man. Love America! Leaving America is also an acceptable outcome.

We should all watch the movie Network News again and especially Howard Beale's antics for a refreshed perspective on hate. Howard Beale was a fictional character 40 years ago, but 40 years before Beale there was a real figure named Adolf Hitler who likewise stirred a nation to anger and insanity, and eventually dragged the whole world into a World War. Adolf Hitler's end was tragic, as was the end for Howard Beale. I don't know about you, but I am still mad as hell about all the hate! We can make it better if we don't have to win all our points at all costs. God bless you all. Peace!

Chapter 18 A Spoonful of Love—Best Medicine for Trump

Mary Poppins-Spoon Full of sugar - YouTube

Lyrics

In every job that must be done
There is an element of fun
You find the fun and snap!
The job's a game

And every task you undertake
Becomes a piece of cake
A lark! A spree! It's very clear to see that

A Spoonful of sugar helps the medicine go down
The medicine go down-wown
The medicine go down
Just a spoonful of sugar helps the medicine go down
In a most delightful way

A robin feathering his nest
Has very little time to rest
While gathering his bits of twine and twig
Though quite intent in his pursuit
He has a merry tune to toot
He knows a song will move the job along - for

A spoonful of sugar helps the medicine go down
The medicine go down-wown
The medicine go down
Just a spoonful of sugar helps the medicine go down
In a most delightful way

The honey bee that fetch the nectar
From the flowers to the comb
Never tire of ever buzzing to and fro
Because they take a little nip
From every flower that they sip
And hence (And hence),
They find (They find)
Their task is not a grind.

Ah-h-h-h-h-h-h-h-h-h ah!

A Spoonful of sugar helps the medicine go down
The medicine go down-wown
The medicine go down
Just a spoonful of sugar helps the medicine go down
In a most delightful way

The experts say the cure for hate is love. Try telling a hateful Democrat to love Trump even if it is the only cure. Nonetheless, if you don't want to hate as much anymore, practice love. Tell your friends. It would be nice if it caught on.

Perhaps, Mary Poppins can help us give Donald Trump a break?. Well, only if we can be convinced that he deserves a break. But that song might be able to do it. See if we all can't feel some love by singing that song out loud. Sing it out you lovers of life if you dare.

We can only control ourselves if we choose to do so. We all have a responsibility in not being goofy about politics. Blame the media. Blame the Democrat Party. Blame the godless. Blame the Never-Trumpers. Then, stop blaming everybody else and point your fingers back at yourselves.

Everybody needs to accept a dose of blame for what we all have created or for what we have been duped by the media into permitting in our lives. The media will ban sugar if they learn about this page and the last. Yes, that's how stupid it is.

Our families' quietly rule our lives, whether blue is their favorite color or red or yellow or black. Who cares? Are we not the most stupid people in the world to let something like colors or politics dominate our lives over family. Figure it out or get out of the room, leave town, and bring the kids in to tell us the right solution. Let's try to find a Mary Poppins to melt our collective hearts.

I am not suggesting that liberal / progressives convert to conservatism, nor that conservatives deny their feelings and become liberal progressives. We should however agree if we can that there is no place for extreme leftists or the far right in our lives.

What I am clearly suggesting is that we begin to tolerate each other and work towards being able to be disagreeing friends. Why not begin to act as humans of yesteryear, who can discuss their differences and who know when to quit and to move on to our sameness. And, of course, just a good measure, such as a spoonful, and please not a wad.

I happen to love the idea of, and the policies of, the President. So, it is OK that I talk about them to the point of resistance with my family if any. I know I need to be understanding with some of my family members with different ideological notions. I learned that. But, just because I believe it does not mean others will accept it. So, a spoonful, not a wad is a good idea.

Like liberal/progressives who work hard at knowing what is best. I too look for things that I hear from my side that make sense. Would it not be nice if I were to find something that I could suggest to those who think differently than I. But, if I suggested they read it or listen to it as a favor, would they? Who knows? I might think they should want to hear or read it and they would not die in the process (just kidding). But, they might not want to do anything of the kind. They have that right in a free country.

But, If I could figure it out, they would be able to understand better why I feel as I feel as my words can go only so far. I would give them a big hug if they engaged. But, what if they won't engage. That is the dilemma.

Obviously, the problem in discovering something that explains things well is getting the other side to agree to hear or read it. I do not suggest that I have the answer to know how to do that.

I can tell you in truth, I find nothing objectionable in listening to the 2019 version of Donald Trump. As a knave, most have been cautioned by the press and the Democrats to not heed him in any way. That is not really fair. It's like 1000 to one v Trump.

Though it may never happen, I would love for some of my best liberal friends to have miraculously heard or viewed the Minnesota Rally from just a few weeks ago. It was impressive and there was nothing negative. One thing about leftists that I know for certain is that they do not want to learn anything about those who are not leftists so it is tough to talk to them. Donald Trump was well loved clearly by his cheering audience. He had 25,000 inside and 20,000 outside. I saw those inside cling onto every Trump word. So did I, and I was over 1000 miles away watching it all on FOX TV. Thank you Fox for showing it. .

In the next chapter, I am about to print in this new book, the entirety of Trump's words at the Minnesota Rally on Oct 10, 2019. Why would I do that? I am always hoping that others can see in Trump's words what I see. Nobody, including me, expects Democrats to watch a Trump Rally on Fox even though conservatives such as I do choose to watch Democrat debates and we even tune in to the Democrat Convention. Interesting contrast.

That is it in a nutshell. I was impressed so much at the Minneapolis Rally that I willingly tuned in to the repeat performance of the rally—on Fox, an almost two-hour speech. What I heard twice, was as good a speech as I have ever heard in my life.

If I had the opportunity today, even just five minutes ago, I would listen to the Minneapolis Speech at the rally again. Thank you President Trump, and thank you to Minneapolis Minnesota. And thank you Fox for airing it. I even enjoy reading it especially with the pictures. I hope you read it for your own edification. I don't know how Trump does it. Yet, he does.

I do like Trump and that slants my opinion of him for sure, but I have heard all the dummy remarks about him just like I had heard them railed against Ronald Reagan. You've heard them too. Yet, Trump is a Military School Graduate and a Wharton School Graduate. He excelled in business and became a multi-billionaire with a helping hand from his father and through a lot of hard work. How many of those making slurs at President Trump have even close to such a record of accomplishments. None. Tell me your names if I am wrong.

Mr. Fred Trump, his dad had no more than $300 million when he passed at 94 years of age, leaving a split among his mom and five children. Donald Trump was already successful and very rich and he became much more successful than even his dad. Donald J. Trump is a phenomenon for those willing to observe. Mr. Trump, like Steve Jobs, does have the Midas touch—like it or not—.

When the corrupt press talked about the Minnesota rally, the mainstream drive-by media offered that “No Republican presidential candidate had won Minnesota since 1972. Donald Trump believes he can change that.” That was very astute and factual but it was minimal for what the President had accomplished as articulated in his many rally speeches. But, the drive-by media assures most of the public never hear what Trump has to say.

Not only does Trump believe he can change that but those of us watching 20 give-away the country Democrats in their debates and an impeachment chairman without any concern for the truth, believe there is no opposition. Why anybody would believe anything a Democrat might utter is a definite phenomenon. Give me another explanation, please.

So, in this, his major campaign rally in Minneapolis, Minnesota on October 10, 2019. Trump went after Ilhan Omar, the Bidens, and Democrats. The speech approached 2 hours in length. I was ready for more when it ended. It was that good. Democrats who hate the truth shied away from the FOX broadcast because they might have been pressed into hearing something that was too close to the truth.

This was the first Donald Trump campaign rally since his faux impeachment inquiry began and he was wound up for the experience and the audience was receptive for whatever direction the president chose to go. They were never bored. Who else in American History could have pulled that off? Nobody!

I ask you all, especially the non-believers to please read this speech here in the next chapter. or go see him on the Internet actually deliver it from scratch. I cannot believe any human being could hold an audience at full attention with breaks for levity of course. Donald Trump is a great American and an amazing American even though the left will give him credit for neither. Their hate knows no bounds.

Yet, Donald Trump did it. Like me, the beneficiaries of his speech were mesmerized by his content, delivery, and eloquence. Thank you Lord for making this man our president. Please let others become familiar with his work and his good spirit.

Chapter 19 President Trump's Rally in Minneapolis, Minnesota

For your reading pleasure, I have included all of the words from the rally, with some transcript errors as corrected below:

Before the President began this great speech, after Mike Pence, VP, had finished his fine remarks, the crowd took control before the president was even introduced.

Then, calmly and with his usual glance across the crowd backward and forward and left and right, the president began speaking and the crowd got still, and they contained themselves to hear the President of the United States of America. So did I. But first, they howled:

Crowd: (11:28)

USA. USA. USA. USA. USA. USA. USA. USA. USA. USA...

Donald Trump: (14:42)

Thank you very much. Thank you, Minnesota. This is a great state. We are going to win this state in a very short period of time. Thank you. This feels like the day before the election. So we have 20,000-plus people inside. We just set a new record. And we have 25,000 people that we still love, outside. And close to 100,000 people wanted to come tonight. Thank you all. This is great. This is really great. Thank you.

Donald Trump: (15:29)

I want to thank our great vice president, Mike Pence, and Karen Pence, for being here tonight. It is great to be back in the Twin Cities with the freedom-loving American patriots who make our country run. You know that. You know it. For the next 13 months, think of that, it seems like yesterday, for the next 13 months, we are going to fight with all of our heart and soul, and we are going to win the great state of Minnesota in 2020.

Donald Trump: (16:17)

America now has the number one economy anywhere in the world, and it's not even close. You know I'm dealing with China right now. They're in Washington. We're going to see if we make a deal. But they want to make it. We're going to determine whether or not we want to make it. But they've been very nice. And today I got a call from one of the top representatives, he said, "Congratulations, Mr. President, on having a truly great, great economy." That's pretty nice.

Donald Trump: (16:59)

We picked up, since the election, trillions of dollars in value. And China has lost trillions of dollars in value. I will say this, if our opponent had won that election, you know what would have happened? Right now China would become the ... It would be the number one economy anywhere in the world. And right now I can tell you they're not even close.

Donald Trump: (17:40)

Our country is stronger than ever before because we are proudly putting, for the first time in a long time, we are putting America first.

USA. USA. USA. USA. USA. USA. USA. USA. USA. USA. USA. USA.
USA. USA. USA. USA.

Donald Trump: (18:18)

And I have to say, there are a lot of very beautiful red T-shirts in the audience. That was a record sale. They did very well. And I'll tell you what: cops love Trump, Trump loves cops. Our bold pursuit of this pro-American agenda has enraged, and you know what's happened, it's enraged the failed ruling class in Washington. Not easy to get them out, but we're doing it slowly, but surely. These corrupt politicians and the radical leftists got rich bleeding America dry. And they knew that my election would finally end their pillaging and looting of our country. And that's what they were doing. And that's what they continue to try and do. That is why, from day one, the wretched Washington swamp has been trying to nullify the results of a truly great and democratic election, the election of 2016. They're trying. They're not getting very far. They want to erase your vote like it never existed. They want to erase your voice. And they want to erase your future. But they will fail, because in America, the people rule again.

Donald Trump: (20:09)

Do you remember that, just 19 minutes after I raised my hand and took the oath of office, The Washington Post, a terrible newspaper that doesn't know how to write the truth, published a story, and in this case, they might've gotten it pretty correct, they said, "The Campaign To Impeach President Trump Has Begun." That was the headline. Little did we know they weren't playing games. Think of that. That was 19 minutes after the oath of office.

Donald Trump: (20:52)

Months earlier, Peter Strzok, remember, he and his lover, Lisa Page. What a group. "She's going to win 10 million to one. She's going to win. I'm telling you, Peter. I'm telling you, Peter, she's going to win. Peter. Oh, I love you so much."

Donald Trump: (21:29)

"I love you, Peter."

Donald Trump: (21:31)

“I love you too, Lisa. Lisa, I love you. Lisa, Lisa, oh God, I love you, Lisa. And if she doesn’t win, Lisa, we’ve got an insurance policy, Lisa. We’ll get that son of a bitch out. We got an insurance policy.”

Donald Trump: (21:50)

And we’re living through the insurance policy. That’s what it is. The phony Russia hoax. ” Lisa, I love you.” Now the do-nothing Democrat con artists and scammers are getting desperate. 13 months, they got to move fast, because they’re not beating us at the polls and they know it, despite the phony polls that you see all the time, their phony polls. You know, polls are no different. Remember I always used to talk about polls, I know polls very well. Polls are no different than crooked writers. They’re crooked polls. They’re crooked polls. No different.

Donald Trump: (22:38)

Boy, that’s a lot of media. Look back there. That’s a lot of media. They are so dishonest. And frankly, they are so bad for our country. They are so bad. And they could be so good for our country. They could be so good. And maybe they’ll change, and maybe they won’t. I’ve been waiting for a long time. After I won the last election, I said, “Finally it’s okay. Finally I’ll get some great press.” They got worse. They got worse. I said, “Finally, we’re going to get ...” I said to the first lady, “Darling, we’re going to finally get respect. We’re going to finally get media and press coverage. It’s going to be great. Look at what we’ve done.” And I’m telling you, they did, they got worse.

Donald Trump: (23:45)

They know they cannot win. You understand. Well, if you didn’t understand, honestly, there’s no way anybody could win, because you’d believe them. If you believe them, there’s no way anybody could ... Because it’s like 94% ... I can do the greatest things in history, and they’ll make them bad to very bad. And if I do a neutral, something neutral, it worked out okay, not great, it’s like, “Give him the electric chair. That was terrible.” Right? No, this is the worst.

Speaker 1: (24:24)

We love you, Trump. [crosstalk 00:24:26]-

Donald Trump: (24:26)

These people and the Democrats, they're partners. It's a partnership. How about on the newscast, like the word "manufactured," it's manu... And every newscast, "Tonight, in a manufactured deal along the border ..." The word's never been used ... All of a sudden every newscast is using it. It's a talking point given to these fakers by the Democrats.

Donald Trump: (24:52)

So they know they can't win the 2020 election, so they're pursuing the insane impeachment witch hunt. I've been going through it now for more time than I've been in office. Because, like Strzok with his insurance deal, this was before, remember this, this was before, that statement was made months before I took office. That statement was made months before the election took place. They said, "Just in case, we're going to have an insurance policy." That only means one thing, "We're going to get him out." So they're telling us. We can't let that ever happen again to another president.

And Rush Limbaugh, Sean Hannity, a lot of people, the great Mark Levin. We have a lot of great people. Lou Dobbs, great people. You know what they said? Every one of them, plus many others, "There's no other man that we've ever met that could have taken it." It's true. Maybe I'm a little different up here. I don't know. But I enjoy it. To me, I'm energized because we're draining the swamp.

The Democrats' brazen attempt to overthrow our government will produce a backlash at the ballot box the likes of which they have never ever seen before in the history of this country. These are bad people. My phone call, as an example, with the president of Ukraine, was perfect. Everybody that looked at it. And the only reason I released it was that the Democrats put out a phony narrative. So I had no choice. And I don't want to do that as president, every time a president from a country calls me, or I call them, we have to release the text. How can you do business that way? Who's going to want to speak to your president? So the president of Ukraine reiterated today at a major news conference, on other subjects, that he was under absolutely no pressure. He doesn't even know what they're talking about. And he used the word, there was no "blackmail" during this call. He used that term. So in theory, that should be the end of it.

Think of it, a president of the United States who's made our economy, with a lot of help from all of you, frankly, but from Mike and from some of our great senators and some of our great people that we have with us, we made this the strongest economy in our history. We've rebuilt our military. We're taking care of healthcare like nobody's been able to do. What we've done is incredible. And by the way, we're protecting your Second Amendment. If you don't have me, your Second Amendment is gone.

Donald Trump: (28:51)

So we have the greatest economy, the greatest military. We've rebuilt our military, $2. 5 trillion, because when I took it over, it was a mess. And what do they want to do? "Let's impeach our president," right? I don't think so. I don't think so. I think we're going to have a turnout the likes of which we've never seen in the history of our country.

Donald Trump: (29:20)

So we were really forced, just to put it away, we were forced. I said, "Just do it." Got the approval from Ukraine. I have to ask. I said, "Hey, do you guys mind?" They said, "That's a strange request." I said, "Don't worry about it. Do you mind?" And they said, "Please, go ahead. Nothing was said wrong on that call." So we released the transcript of the call, which was so good that that crooked Adam Schiff, this guy is crooked, he had to make up a fake conversation that never happened-

Donald Trump: (30:03)

A fake conversation that never happened, and he delivered it to the United States Congress and the American people. It was a total fraud. And then Nancy Pelosi said, "Oh, I think the president said that." These people are sick. I'm telling you, they're sick. And you know what? Had they waited one day longer, they would have had the transcript of the actual call, word for word. It would've been perfect. Instead, they released it, they went early, they said all these horrible things. You know why? Because they never thought in a million years that I was going to release a transcript of the call.

Donald Trump: (30:59)

So Nancy Pelosi, upon hearing a false story from a whistleblower that had no clue what was going on in that call, or somebody gave her very bad advice, but also hearing it from shifty shift Nancy Pelosi said, a day before seeing the transcript of the call with the Ukrainian president, “We’ve got to impeach him. We’ve got to impeach him.” Right? And then she saw the call and she said to her people, “What the hell? Nobody ever told me this was the call.” But she keeps going anyway because the press is fake and they play right into their hands.

The do nothing democratic extremists have gone so far left that they believe it should not be a crime to cross our border illegally, and it should be a crime to have a totally appropriate casual, beautiful, accurate phone call with a foreign leader. I don’t think so. As our brilliant White House counsel wrote to the Democrats yesterday, he said, “Their highly partisan and unconstitutional effort threatens grave and lasting damage to our democratic institutions, to our system of free elections, and to the American people.” That’s what it is. To the American people. It’s so terrible. Democrats are on a crusade to destroy our democracy. That’s what’s happening. We will never let it happen. We will defeat them.

I mean, look at their debates. These people are crazy. They want to spend $99 trillion to redo buildings all over the United States. I said, “What about China? What about Russia? What about India? What about all these other countries where that stuff is just flowing out?” It’s all right. Let him give you the answer. Man, did the cops act fast. He’s already gone. That’s unbelievable. That’s the fastest ... You know I have ... Look, I love law enforcement. I love the cops. I love the police, all of it.

Minneapolis, Minneapolis, you’ve got a rotten man. You’ve got to change your mayor. You’ve got a bad mayor. You’ve got a bad mayor. But you know what? The police ... I’ve done this a lot and every once in a while we'll have very little disturbance. It's really ... Actually, is there any place where we can have more fun than at a Trump rally? And we've set every record at every place, virtually, that we've gone. And one of the big musicians said, "And Trump does it without a guitar." Can you believe it? Without a guitar. But this guy ... So I've had it a lot where ... But sometimes it'll take the police like 30 seconds, 50 seconds.

It's like Roger Penske when you watch him, who's getting the Presidential Medal of Freedom, by the way, pretty soon. He won 18 Indy 500s, 18, Roger Penske. But it's like the way they change those tires, takes four seconds to change the whole damn thing. I say, "How the hell do they do it?" That's the way these cops just reacted. That was a record. I think it was a ... I've had good service, but I've never had anything like that. I look up, the guy is already gone. Ah, we love you with the red shirts. So now the Democrats are making a pathetic bid to save sleepy Joe, sleepy Joe Biden.

And you know what? I'd love to run against him, to be honest. Anybody like that. If you can't beat him in a debate, you've got a big problem folks. You can't beat him in a debate, you can't be president. Because what are you going to do against President Xi and Kim Jong Un. You can't beat sleepy Joe, but now we're going to meet with Kim Jong Un? I don't think so. But he's totally owned and totally controlled by the Washington swamp for many years.

Two months after president Obama put Joe in charge of Ukraine policy, they put Joe Biden in charge of Ukraine policy. Listen to this. And the press will not write it. They say, "In totally unsubstantiated charges ..." every time they talk about him. President Trump has said that his son walked away with a fortune. Now you know that's a totally unsubstantiated charge. Really? It's not an unsubstantiated, it's fact. Joe's son Hunter got thrown out of the Navy and then he became a genius on Wall Street in about two days.

By the way, whatever happened to Hunter. Where the hell is he?

Where's Hunter? Hey fellows, I have an idea for a new t-shirt. I love the cops, but let's do another t-shirt. Where's Hunter? Where is he? Here's Hunter, being examined by sleepy eyes Chuck Todd or some of these people. Hunter, it's so great that you're here, sir. Hunter, I know they're giving you approximately $168,000 a month. I hear they paid you a big check of $3 million. I just want to speak on behalf of NBC who's absolutely one of the worst. I just want to tell you ... Hunter, Hunter I just want to tell you I couldn't be happier for you and your family and I know you don't know anything about energy and I know it's an energy company, but I think they made a great deal, Hunter.

And then they fly to China, and I'm dealing with people right now. They're tough as hell, those Chinese negotiators, and Hunter, who's not too smart, Hunter. He goes in, he has a meeting, he walks out in his fund with 1.5 billion, with a B, one point five billion dollars. These aren't the same Chinese negotiators that I'm dealing with, I can tell you. These are not the same ones, but we are doing very well in that negotiation. Now, think of it, where's Hunter? Where is Hunter? I want to see Hunter? Hunter, you know nothing about energy, you know nothing about China, you know nothing about anything, frankly. Hunter, you're a loser. Why did you get one point five billion dollars, Hunter.

And your father was never considered smart. He was never considered a good Senator. He was only a good vice president because he understood how to kiss Barack Obama's ass. True. Thank you. Thank you. It's true. It's true. And they're always saying the same thing. Yeah, he got a billion five, we admit it, they admit it, it's nothing, but oh, it's not that same thing, president Trump made a totally unsubstantiated claim about Hunter Biden and his father. It's not unsubstantiated, you crooked son of a guns, it's 100% true. 100%. Even the smart guys on Wall Street, and I know all of them, they are smart. They've never seen anything like that one before. I've called them. Does that ever happen? Never happens. Guy walks in, no experience, no nothing. Walks out with a billion five. Gee. Flies in on Air Force Two with his father, the vice president. Don't forget, that's when he was vice president. So China gives his son 1.5 billion. How would you like to have Joe Biden take over negotiations right now with China? I don't think so.

I don't think so. Meanwhile, Biden allowed China to rip off America for eight years as vice president, and Barack Obama let him just rob us blind, and we're not doing that anymore. Those days are over. The Bidens got rich and that is substantiated. While America got robbed, that's what happened. Sleepy Joe and his friends out America, they didn't have tough negotiations. I look at these trade deals and I say, "Who the hell could have done this?" If you didn't ... If you had no business instinct, no business ability, if you had nothing, if you're dumb as hell, you wouldn't make these deals, they're so bad. I say, "Who made these deals? Who made these deals?" But we're ripping them all up and redoing them and they're going to be very good. Wait until you see what happens. Now that I'm your president, you see it. America is winning again and we're respected again as a nation.

Crowd: (42:36)

USA, USA, USA, USA, USA, USA, USA.

Donald Trump: (43:00)

A brand new report just came out as I'm walking on the stage. Hard to believe, actually. It turns out that Joe Biden was vice president, he worked with the so called whistle blower.

Crowd: (43:20)

Boo.

Donald Trump: (43:20)

This is nothing but a partisan witch hunt, sabotage, and I'm sure they're going to say it's totally unsubstantiated, but one of them wrote this story. Congratulations, by the way. That's very nice. That's really good. That's the way you should do it. Good. Good. Good. In the twisted worldview of Democrats and the media, it's okay for politicians to ship our jobs to foreign countries, flood our communities with drugs and crime, and enrich themselves at America's expense. Their treachery is allowed because they go along with the rigged Washington game, and it is far more rigged. When I ran, I thought it was rigged, but this is crazy what's happening. But if you refuse to bow or bend to the Washington swamp, which I could do very easily, I'd be much more popular. Folks, it would be so much easier.

I got it. I got to tell you, isn't it much better when I go off script? Isn't it better? So much. It's just ... Hey folks, the greatest buyer of advertisements in the history of the world, Mike Lindell, My Pillow. I have never seen so many ads. I think he's the greatest ad negotiator in history, and I told them, I said, "Would you do me a favor? All the money we spend on these political campaigns, if I gave some of that money to Mike, I think it would have ads every single minute of every single show." I never saw so many. Anyway. But the lawless political establishment will try to frame you. They'll persecute you. They'll swear and just swear up and down that they're telling the truth.

When Nancy Pelosi was on television the other day ... I have to say, I have to say I was very proud of George Stephanopoulos. I was very proud. It's not often. She said, "No, no shifty shift told the truth when he said that." Stephanopoulos said, "No way. No, no. It wasn't the truth. It was a false statement." No, no. It was the truth. He said, "No." And she really believes it. So she's either got one of two problems. She's either really stupid, okay? Or she's really lost it. Or maybe there's a certain dishonesty [inaudible 00:16:22]. But they smear you, they spy on you, and they target your friends, your family, your staff for harassment, for abuse, for destruction.

I came down to Washington with incredible people. We won a great political campaign. They were bright eyed and bushy tailed. that's a nice phrase. They came down, they were happy. They wanted to turn the country around. They wanted to do great things. All of a sudden they get summoned and they get subpoenaed by Robert Mueller. How good was he as a witness? Not too good and by people that were, I call them the 13 angry Democrats, that turned into 18 angry Democrats. It was disgraceful. So people that were going down, "Sir, what is this?" I look, "Oh wow, that's a subpoena." What the hell is this? They took people ... I really mean this. They took people that were full of life and energy and vigor. We had just won the greatest campaign in the history of American politics, it's true. It's true. And they destroyed their lives. They destroyed their lives. They went home.

I could name many people, one in particular, who came down, an incredible young woman. She was going to help people. She wanted to help people. She had causes that were so good. She wanted to help people, and she ended up going home, dark, dark. Her life became hell. They ruined people. They destroyed people, good people. People that ended up paying far more money in legal fees than they made. Than they made. They destroyed great people. They're vicious, horrible, and the media was behind every single step. They destroyed so many lives. They destroyed so many lives, and they're continuing to do it. And it's a disgrace.

Donald Trump: (48:50)

When all of their ludicrous hoaxes have been exposed as frauds, these sinister fakers then tried to impeach you for daring to call out their own corruption. There's nothing like the dirty political establishment, and I have to tell you, this is, friend of mine, very smart, brilliant guy, was with me about two weeks ago. We just got rid of the Russia hoax and then a week later the Ukraine hoax starts. I had a week of like, "I can think about everything perfect. It's so beautiful." And he said, "President." I said, "Call me Donald. You've called me Donald for 35 years." "I will. Thank you Donald." I've lost all my friends because they're all scared to talk. Honestly, I'm the president that they can't talk to me anymore. It's like they're afraid. They respect the office. It's true. They say, "President." I say, "Do me a favor, Richard. You've called me Donald for 35 years. Call me Donald, please. I want somebody to call me Donald."

True. He said to me, I just told him call me ... He said, "President, I can't do it." He said. So he says, "President, you've been here now for, think of it, almost three years. Can you believe we're here three years?" We, we, it's we. And we have to promise them no more than 16 years. Okay? No more. No more. 16 more years. I'm only kidding. Now they'll go back. See, he wants to run for more. But he said, "President, could I ask you a question? It's so important to me." He's a great businessman, very successful. He said, "You deal with all of these nations, these great, powerful ... Who is the worst to deal with? Is it China? Is it North Korea? Is India? Is it Russia? Please tell me, Mr. Pres, who is the toughest nation to deal with?" I said, "You're not going to believe this. It's the USA is the toughest nation to deal with." The USA.

It's true. Because we're dealing with some very sick and deranged people. There is nothing that the dirty political establishment hates more than a president that they cannot intimidate, own and control. They're trying to stop me because they know that I don't answer to them, I answer to you. It's true. I never say this. I don't think I've ever said it in a speech, but they'll find out if I did. They'll give me Pinocchios, he said it before, but I don't know if I ever said this before. But I make, as president, about $450,000. I give it away. I don't care. I don't want it.

Donald Trump: (52:26)

I never hear anything. Can you imagine if I didn't. I give it away to ... You can only give it, you can't keep it. You can't actually make a gift. You can give it to your different agencies. So I can give it to health, I can give it to transportation, I can give it to military, but I give it away all the time. Now, and if I ever did ... But it's 450. If somebody stays from, let's say, a middle East country in one of my hotels and we charge him 392 dollars and 53 cents for staying, and I never heard of the guy and I don't want to hear about him, they say, "Trump is getting rich off our nation."

Donald Trump: (53:11)

I lose billions being president. I don't care. It's nice to be rich, I guess. But I lose billions. If somebody rents a room someplace and they pay me two months in rent or hotel fees, I never heard of the people. I never know who they are. They say, "Emoluments." Nobody ever heard of the word emoluments before. Emoluments. It's the craziest thing I've ever seen. I tell you, it's cost me billions of dollars to be president. It really has. And at some point I'll probably to prove that, and I look forward to doing it.. It's very easy. It's very easy. And there is nothing that makes me happier than making that decision to run and win and straighten out the mess that these people have created.

So in desperate attempt to attack our movement. Nancy and Chuck, two beauties, have given control of the Democrat party entirely over to the radical left, including Minnesota's own representative Ilhan Omar. I know you people. I know you people. I know the people of Minnesota, and I want to tell you, and I also, at the same time, it's both a question and a statement, how'd the hell did that ever happen? How did it happen? How did it happen? Congresswoman Omar is an America hating socialist. She minimized the September 11th attack on our homeland. Where far more than 3,000 people died, saying, "Some people did something big deal. Some people did something." She pleaded for compassion for ISIS recruits right here in Minnesota. Omar laughed that Americans speak of Al-Qaeda. You remember that tape? Speak of Al-Qaeda. But when we say something about the United States, you just don't say America with any intensity.

Remember that? Representative Omar has a history of launching virulent anti-semitic screeds, whether you like it or not. She's said the US support for Israel is all about the Benjamins. She said that pro-Israel lawmakers have an allegiance to a foreign country. Omar wrote that Israel has hypnotized the world, may Allah awaken the people and help them to see the evil doings of Israel and the United States.

How do you have such a person representing you in Minnesota? I'm very angry at you people right now. She is a disgrace to our country, and she is one of the big reasons that I'm going to win, and the Republican party is going to win Minnesota in 13 months.

Crowd: (57:13)

[inaudible 00:57:29].

Donald Trump: (57:13)

Thank you very much. So we're honored to have with us today a special guest, a man that really is a terrific talented writer. He knows a great deal about all those tangled lies of Omar. Mr. Scott Johnson of Power Line. He wrote some stuff, I can't believe it. Where's Scott? Where's Scott? Thank you, Scott. Thank you, Scott. What a job. Man, do you have her figured out. The only problem is, Scott, it's incredible talent, much more talented than most of these people that you heard about. The problem is they never pick it up. They don't want to pick it up, but we pick it up, Scott, and the people get it and we thank you for your great reporting. Thank you. Thank you very much. And Scott reported everything about Omar is a fraud, including her name.

Donald Trump: (58:46)

Scott reports his sources told him that, quote, Omar's legal husband was Omar's brother and that she had married him for fraudulent purposes. You mean like coming into the United States, maybe? And as Scott says, "We have seen a plethora of congressional scandals in our history yet we have never seen scandals like Omar's in Congress, and nothing gets done about it." I hope that some of you people are looking, because what AOC has gotten away with campaign financing and what ... I call it AOC plus three, that's what it is. And Omar is one of the three. What AOC has gotten away with all of that money that she used for her personal self with campaign finance is worse, and nothing happens to them, but it happens to you, and it's not fair. The fact is, we're in a struggle for the survival of democracy in America. The only message these radical socialists and extremists will understand-

Donald Trump: (01:00:03)

Message these radical socialists and extremists will understand is a crushing defeat on November 3rd, 2020. With your help, we will win back the House, we will keep the Senate and we will win the White House. And we're thrilled to be joined tonight by some incredible people that have helped me so much. One of your tremendous talented, tough, Congressman Tom Emmer. Tom. Also a man, you don't want to fight him, and you don't want to play him in hockey because he was tough.

He just won, not that recently but pretty recently, and I was out here campaigning for him and working hard, and it turned out to be an easy race because everyone loves him and respects him.

Congressman Pete Stauber. And a man who gets in the trenches, and he just doesn't care. He wants to win for the people. He loves you. He loves this state. He loves this country. Jim Hagedorn. Thank you. And a great friend of mine with his incredible family. He's a friend. He's smart. I guess you'd say he's brilliant. His education is incredible, his military career has been incredible.

Donald Trump: (01:01:51)

Then he ran for office, and now he's a United States Senator from the great state of Arkansas, Senator Tom Cotton. Great guy. And Minnesota Senate Majority Leader, Paul Gazelka. Paul. Thank you Paul. Minnesota GOP Chairwoman, Jennifer Carnahan. She's been incredible. I said, "Jennifer, are we going to win in 13 months?" She said, "Honestly sir, I've never seen anything like this. It's going to be easy. Don't ever say... Just assume we're two points behind, okay?" Two points behind.

Donald Trump: (01:02:50)

You never ever... Please. Always just assume you're a little behind, but we're going to win this state by so much that people are going to be shocked. Ad plenty of other states too. We had a rally three weeks ago in New Mexico, and New Mexico's a hard state for Republicans, hasn't been won in a long time also. And we had receptivity that was unbelievable. The audience was 40% Hispanic, where we're doing great. And you know, Hispanic, they understand borders better than anybody, better than we do.

Donald Trump: (01:03:36)

They understand safety, they understand their job, they don't want people taking it away, they don't want crime. They understand it better. That's why we're doing so well, but we're in New Mexico, and I'm telling you, that was electric. But honestly, all evenings are electric. We haven't had any bad ones. We haven't. They're all electric. A woman who headed up the great state of Michigan for me, a state that hadn't been won in a long time by a Republican for whatever reason, but it hadn't been won.

Donald Trump: (01:04:09)

I guess we didn't have the right candidates, right? But a woman who would call me constantly. I'd say, "I don't want to talk to her. She's giving me a headache." "Sir, if you make one more trip, you're going to win Michigan." I say, "All right," I make the trip, I go back home. I get a call the next morning, "Sir, we need one more." This went over and over and over, and we ended up winning the state of Michigan, and I said, "Who the hell was that woman that kept bugging me to go back to Michigan and speak just one more time every week? One more time, sir."

Donald Trump: (01:04:52)

And her name is Ronna McDaniel. She's fantastic, and she's the head of the RNC. She's great. And our campaign manager, a man who's really been... They used to say that Crooked Hillary had a very very sophisticated campaign. After she lost, they said, "I guess it wasn't sophisticated." We had a sophisticated campaign. Nobody knows the world of computers better than this guy. Brad Parscale. Remember when they used to say it? You know, I never got credit. My father used to teach me, if you can do it for less and win, that's good.

Donald Trump: (01:05:39)

He wasn't talking politics. The last thing... He's looking down. He's definitely looking down, not looking up. He was great. He was tough, but he was great. But my father would say, "If you could do it for less and win, that's a good thing, not a bad thing. If you can build a building for less money than the guy across the street, and if it's a nicer building and you can rent for less, you're really... That's like a good thing." So in the campaign, we spent much less money than Crooked Hillary Clinton, much. And we won. And we won.

Donald Trump: (01:06:17)

We won 306 to 223. That's a pretty big... Remember? Remember they said electoral college. By the way, when you run, if you're running, the electoral college is like the 100 yard dash, and the total vote, you don't go certain places. You focus. Electoral college. We have to explain to them, it's different. So we won 306, and do you remember they sued to say one's the 100 yard dash. You practice. One's the mile. You practice. It's a different race. Winning the total vote is much easier in my opinion. The electoral college, I had to go to 22 different states. For the total vote, I'd go to four states maximum, right? Much easier. It's much easier.

I'm all for it, but the electoral college is better for our country because it forces you to go places that you wouldn't go. I love Maine. I went to Maine four or five times. I needed one point. Maine gave me one point. And what happened? What happened? I went there numerous times. Everyone said, "Why?" Because I was told by these fraudsters back here in the media that Trump cannot get to 270. He cannot get... They had me maximum, if everything worked, right? At 269. So I kept going to Maine, and you know what? We won that one point in Maine. We won it.

Donald Trump: (01:07:47)

It's true. But I kept going. They say, "Why?" I said, "Well, first of all, it is really a beautiful place," but we won the point. But they said, "He can not get to 270," and I heard this for months and months. I had such a headache, almost as bad as listening to Mike's damn commercials about those pillows. Maybe I need one of those pillows to cure my headache. Does it cure headaches? I think so.

Donald Trump: (01:08:13)

But here's the thing. Here's the thing. So they said, "He cannot get to 270." In other words, you can't win. You don't get to 270, it's over. You can't win, right? He cannot do it. There's no way of doing it, and they were right. I got to 306. They were right. But I didn't get to 306. You got to 306. We won incredible states. We won incredible states. We won Wisconsin, we won Michigan, we won Pennsylvania, we won North Carolina, we won South Carolina, we won Florida.

What a run. Do you remember the evening that we won? I think... Look, forgetting me, I think it was won of all of us together because we all worked hard. I was the messenger, but we all worked hard. That was our victory, not my victory. But that was one of the greatest nights in the history of television, one of the greatest nights, and hopefully it'll go down when we're allowed to get all of this stuff seeded... You know, it's like a tree. You plant it. You plant it. It has to go, but it needs a little...

Donald Trump: (01:09:32)

That's why we need the four more additionally years. It's got to grab on and catch, so they can't destroy it. So they can't destroy it. But I think it'll go down, and I hope it's going to go down as one of the greatest evenings in the history of this country, because it's never happened, anything like that before. And these guys don't even question it. They just sit back and say, "I guess he's right about that." I'll never forget the night before, I was at a tremendous arena. The place was going crazy. It was like this, going crazy, and two reporters that hate my guts, they looked at themselves, they looked at each other.

Donald Trump: (01:10:11)

Famous shot. They're looking like this and they're saying, "What the hell is going on?" They knew. They knew. And I didn't need Beyonce and Jay Z, and I didn't need little Bruce Springsteen and all of these people. They'd get all these people. They'd come in because she couldn't get a crowd. They'd come in, they'd sing. They got Bruce Springsteen. Okay? He'd do about two songs and leave. What happens is, they leave, and then everyone leaves with them, and she's still speaking in front of the same lousy crowd. It's the craziest thing I've ever seen.

And then they complain. Sometimes I'll use terrible word like hell. The other day I used the word hell. I got hell from... They said, "He used terrible language." I used the word hell. It was so bad. But you've got to hear Jay Z, the words he was using, he was using the F word all over the place, and then the next day they say I use bad language. The word hell is a terrible word. These people are sick. But that was an amazing evening. I'll never forget that evening. Look. Outside of your family and your children and things...

Speaker 2: (01:11:35)

I love you Trump!

Donald Trump: (01:11:36)

I love you too, darling. It was one of the highest rated evenings in the history of television. You add up all those networks. Remember the woman crying? Oh my God. No, they weren't biased at all. Now, another very special man who's with us today, but he'll never be a man to me, he'll always be my boy, you know what I mean? Right? He's my boy. He's my little six foot six boy, Eric Trump. And the parents understand that, right? They may be big and strong and older. To a parent, a child is always their boy or always their little beautiful girl, and I know that's probably politically incorrect.

Donald Trump: (01:12:42)

They'll say, "It was terrible what he said about women. Terrible." But they're our boy and they're our girl, and it doesn't matter how old we get and how old they get, is that a correct statement? And I'm also proud to endorse your next Republican Senator from Minnesota, a man that I've known, a man that is tough and smart, a man that's running against somebody that's never done a damn thing in the Senate, Mr. Jason Lewis.

Donald Trump: (01:13:17)

And Jason did a great job in Congress. Congressman Lewis, thank you very much, and thank you for putting up with all of this stuff because I'll tell you, it's going to be nasty. It's going to be nasty. They're going to make up stories about you. They're going to say things that's going to want to make your wife say, "Why did I marry this guy?" Just say, "Don't worry about it. It's just another phony story." Thank you very much Mr. and Mrs. Lewis. Jason, thank you.

Donald Trump: (01:14:02)

And Jason, they can say that about Tom Cotton. He's too perfect, this guy. He can't say... They can't say it about you, Tom. Anyway, good luck Jason. Do well. And I don't know why, but with all of the great people I just introduced, for tonight, maybe this is the most important person, because I turned on a very good show in the morning. Fox and friends. They treat us great. I just want fairness.

What a great group. Ainsley and Steve, and by the way, Brian has gotten a lot better, right?

Donald Trump: (01:14:49)

Brian was a seven, and he's getting close to 10 territory, and Steve has been so great, and Ainsley's just incredible. And sometimes, Pete Hegseth gets on there for the [inaudible 01:15:02] And how good does Jessie Waters do? How good? Right? Just some really great people. And again, Tucker's been very good I have to say. He's been good. Smart. He's been great. Tucker, and the legendary Sean Hannity. Great. Number one. Number one show. Sean's got the number one show. And Laura Ingraham is knocking them out of the park, Laura.

Donald Trump: (01:15:46)

And you go over, Maria Bartiromo, and the great Lou Dobbs. How good are they? Lou Dobbs. And many more. And many more. How about Greg? Greg used to hate me. Now, he's good. Oh, we can't forget... We can't forget Judge Jeanine. I would be in such trouble if I forgot Judge Jeanine. No, these are... And there are many more. I just... Look, I'm just rattling some names off, but they're just terrific people. They're terrific people. But a man that I have to really say something very special about...

So I'm watching Fox and Friends early in the morning, very early in the 6:00 slot, because I'm out of there pretty good, and I see a handsome young man named Bob Kroll, Cops For Trump. And he's talking about this lousy mayor they've got. Now, he didn't quite say that, but I say it. He's talking about this lousy mayor that won't let the cops, the police, the law enforcement... My father always used to say, "Son..." And he meant it to. "Never say cops. It's disrespectful. Say police officer." I said, "Okay Pop."

Donald Trump: (01:17:09)

But honestly, the truth is with time, I love you guys whether you're cops, police officers, law enforcement. I'll call you whatever you want. It doesn't matter. You are so great, so respected. You don't even know how much our public loves you. You don't know it. You don't know it. You don't know it. But I see this guy, and I don't know if he's done a lot of television before, but he was very effective and very good. And he was saying how the police aren't being allowed to take care of this rally, and yet with President Obama and Bush and all these people, they were fine, fine.

Everybody comes. They fall asleep at a rally. But they weren't allowed to do the job for us, and they went wild. So what I want to do... Go home to Mommy. Mommy says, "I saw you on television tonight. I love Trump. Don't you ever do that again." "Yes Mom. Yes Mom." But the job he did before the election, I came right here to Minnesota, and I pledged to address this really important issue, and it's the issue of law enforcement. And when I saw this man, this great gentleman on television pouring out his guts, pouring out his heart... I don't know him.

Donald Trump: (01:19:09)

He knows I've been good to law enforcement. He knows I've been good to, as my father would say, "The police." He knows I love the cops. He knows that, and so does everyone else. I mean, it's so many shirts, so many red shirts, and there are plenty of people here without the red shirts, and I want to just tell you, the respect that we have for law enforcement is unbound. It's unbound. Come up here. Bob, come up.

Donald Trump: (01:19:54)

Bob Kroll: (01:20:42)

What can I say after that? Tune in to Fox, 10:15 tonight. Shannon Bream, they asked us on. How can you thank this guy for everything he's done for law enforcement? Wonderful president.

Donald Trump: (01:21:05)

Thank you fellas. I'll see you later. Thank you.

Speaker 3: (01:21:05)

Thank you sir.

Donald Trump: (01:21:05)

Thank you very much. Thank you. Great people. Thank you. What a group. I think your very weak mayor made a mistake when he took them on. As you know, for many years, leaders in Washington brought large numbers of refugees to your state from Somalia without considering the impact on schools and communities and taxpayers. I promised you that as president, I would give local communities a greater say in refugee policy, and put in place enhanced vetting and responsible immigration controls.

Donald Trump: (01:22:13)

And I've done that. Since coming into office, I have reduced refugee resettlement by 85%, and as you know, maybe especially in Minnesota, I kept another promise. I issued an executive action, making clear that no refugees will be resettled in any city or any state without the express written consent of that city or that state. So speak to your mayor. You should be able to decide what is best for your own cities and for your own neighborhoods, and that's what you have the right to do right now. And believe me, no other president would be doing that.

If Democrats were ever to seize power, they would open the floodgates to unvetted, uncontrolled migration at levels you have never seen before. Do you think you have it bad now? You would never have seen anything like what they want to do. But in the Trump administration, we will always protect American families first, and that has not been done in Minnesota. We've also implemented the strongest screening and vetting mechanisms ever put into place. We are keeping terrorists, criminals and extremists the hell out of our country. And I want to thank the country of Mexico.

The president of Mexico has been incredible. We have now, 27,000 Mexican soldiers. They're great, and they're tough, and they are now protecting our border, and those numbers have gone down like this. Thank you Mr. President. We will not make the mistakes made in European countries, that allow a violent ideology to take root in our country, on our shores. We're not going to allow it to happen. And as you all know, to protect our citizens from those who would do harm to us, I instituted a very controversial, very hard to get, travel ban on some of the world's most dangerous countries.

And the other day, one of the fake news reporters in the back said... They were talking about the travel ban, and they said, "Well you know, the president has lost in court." They said, "Where?" "On the travel ban." And he's right. I lost, and then I lost at the appellate division, and then I won at the United States Supreme Court. Right? And he knew that, but he said I lost on the... And he was right. I lost, and then I lost again, but then I won, and we have the travel ban. But instead of saying, "He lost, and then he lost at the appellate, and then he won at the United States Supreme Court," he said, "He lost on the travel ban."

Donald Trump: (01:26:10)

These are very dishonest people. Do you understand that? Very dishonest people. In the Republican party, we believe that those who seek to join our society must embrace our values, honor our history, and love our people. Democrats also support deadly sanctuary cities, which release dangerous criminal aliens into the heart of your communities, and we're not letting it happen anymore. Republicans believe American cities should be sanctuaries for Americans, not for criminal aliens. My administration is taking historic action to secure the border. We have reduced illegal border crossings by over 60% since May, and we are building the wall faster than anyone ever anticipated it could be built. And this is a serious wall. You've all seen it. It's going up rapidly, and you think that was easy? I had every Democrat in Congress fighting me, fighting me, fighting me. I had a lot of the rhinos fighting me. They say, "See, he's not getting it built. He's not getting..." Let me tell you. You have every Democrat fighting you.

Donald Trump: (01:27:47)

We took it from here, and we took it from there, and we took it from all over the place, and we got that thing. That's the biggest patchwork of financing you've ever seen, and that sucker is going up, and it is the finest, it is the strongest, it's largely 30 feet tall, which is the maximum height that they wanted. I went to the Border Patrol, and I sat down with 15 representatives of the Border Patrol, and I said, "What do you want? What's your ideal?" I actually said, "I want to give you the Rolls Royce," and they killed me for that.

They said, "It's not an American made product." Yeah, they happened to be right. No, they're right about that one. They're actually right there, Tom. But I said, "I want to give you the Rolls Royce of walls. Tell me." And they told me everything, and then we built some alternative walls. We built all different types. We built about seven of them, and then we had climbers come in. The one that worked the best was the one we're building. It also, unfortunately... The bad news, it's also the most expensive. But we got it for the right price. We got it for the right price.

Donald Trump: (01:29:08)

It's steel, it's hardened concrete, it's deep, it's high, it's a thing of beauty. And it's going to keep bad people out of our country. That's what it's going to do. And the Democrats knew this. Most of the Democrats four years ago, they wanted a wall. Now all of a sudden, they don't want a wall. You know why they don't want a wall? Because I want it. That's the only reason. And I just thought of it a year ago. I said, "Man, this could've been so much easier." All I had to do is say, "We don't want a wall," and they would've given me all the financing I wanted for the wall. What was I thinking? We're not going to build a wall, and they would have forced me to build it. I would've... It's true. Under this administration, we are also ending the-

Donald Trump: (01:30:03)

... this administration. We are also ending the endless wars. We have to do it, folks. We have to do it. We have totally defeated the ISIS caliphate, and I did that in rather quick time if you remember, because we have the greatest fighting machine, now. When I came in and was totally depleted. We have great generals, we have great warfighters, and they did it so fast.

Donald Trump: (01:30:29)

I flew to Iraq, I met with the generals, right? I met with the generals. I said, "I hear it's going to take a year to two years." "Sir, we can do it in two weeks.” I said, “What?” “They don’t let us fight, sir. They don’t let us fight. We want to fight. They don’t let us fight.” I said, “I let you fight.” I said, “How come if they say it’s going to take anywhere from a year to two years, you say you can do it so quickly?” He said, “Sir, we’re going to hit them from the front. We’re going to hit them from the back. We’re going to hit them from the sides, from underground, from overground. We going to hit the hell out of them.” And they did. And we won very quickly.

Donald Trump: (01:31:15)

But from now on, we want to fight where it is to the benefit of the United States of America, not to the benefit of other countries. And we will only fight to win. We’re only going to fight to win. We don’t fight to win. We don’t fight to win. The Turks have been fighting with the Kurds for two centuries, and Turkey, as you know, is a NATO ally. But I’ve been rough on them.

Donald Trump: (01:31:41)

We’ve defeated 100% of that ISIS caliphate, and no longer have any troops in the area. We don’t have any troops. The troops have been pulled out. Where Turkey is carrying out now a very tough campaign against the Kurds, get them out. So Turkey is right now waging a very tough campaign against the Kurds. We got along with the Kurds, and we helped the Kurds. And don’t forget they’re also fighting for their land. You know that. But they’re fighting.

Donald Trump: (01:32:25)

So we have three choices. You’re ready? Here are the three choices. We don’t have any soldiers there because we’ve left. We won. We left. Take a victory, United States. We left. Take a victory, take a victory. Bring our troops back home.

Donald Trump: (01:32:45)

I told this story yesterday, I have to sign letters, it’s the hardest thing I have to do. I sign letters, “Dear Mr. and Mrs. Smith from Arkansas. Dear Mr. and Mrs. Jones from Alabama. Dear Mr. and Mrs. Somebody from some great state, I’m sorry to inform you, your son has been killed in combat. I’m so sorry.” And every letter is individually done because sometimes the parents, they’re grieving, and they get together with other parents, and I don't want to see that it's like the same letter. So we do different letters. It's the hardest thing I have to do. Hardest thing, it's the hardest thing I have ... I was telling Tom Cotton, it's the hardest thing that I have to do. And I sign those letters, and it just, it breaks your heart.

And by the way, there's a time to fight. Nobody fights harder than I do. But there's a time, and there's not necessarily a time. But I send these letters out, quite a few. And sometimes I send letters out, it's called blue on green, where we're teaching people how to fight and then they turn the gun on our soldiers and shoot them in the back. And that's the hardest thing for a parent. I have all of them. I know everyone. That's the hardest thing for a parent when they get notification, because they learn how their child has died. When the so-called people that were teaching how to fight turn the gun on them, and shoot. We've had a lot of that, a lot of it in Afghanistan, more than we've ever had proportionately before. It's a horrible, horrible thing. But I have to sign these letters.

Donald Trump: (01:34:27)

And sometimes I go out to a place, Dover Air Force Base, it's a very tough experience. Mike Pence goes, I go, other people go, Tom Cotton goes. We go out there, and we meet the parents and the families, the wives, the children, the sisters, the brothers. We meet them, and we talked to them, and their son or daughter is being flown in from some far away place in a coffin, and these things are just impossible. I don't know how parents can do it, even. And I'll meet them. And we have a particular Colonel, that's all he does. So good. So professional. That's what he does. He said, "I greet the dead, sir. I greet the dead."

Donald Trump: (01:35:18)

And what happens is this big incredible machine flies in, this tremendous cargo plane, and it flies in so powerful, so big. I'll be talking to some of the parents, and they'll act like they're fine. I said, "How are you doing?" "We're fine, sir. We're fine. We're really good." I say, "That's great." And I'll tell the Colonel, I'll say, "Colonel, I think they're doing great." "No sir, they're not going to do great. You'll see." And I didn't know what he was talking about, this is the first time.

Then we went outside to the runway, and this incredible machine is flying in, and it lands, and it comes over, and it pulls up, and we have military guards, we have incredible talented musicians that do this. That's what they do. What happens is that door opens up, and the Colonel told me, he said, "Sir, when that door opens up, those same people that you think are okay, do things that you'll never see. You will hear sounds like you've never heard." That's what he does.

Donald Trump: (01:36:25)

I saw that door open up with a coffin with a flag over it. The door was opened, and these beautiful soldiers, five or six on each side, lifting the coffin and walking down the runway, the plank, they call it, off this cargo plane. And I see parents make sounds, that were just 20 minutes ago absolutely fine, make sounds, scream and cry like you've never seen before. The Colonel was telling me that, "Sir, you'll see things that you've never seen before. A mother who was fine 20 minutes ago, you think, breaking the military line and jumping off, and then jumping onto a coffin of her son or her daughter, jumping on, on top of the flowers, on top of the American flag." I've seen this.

Then I have all these people that want to stay. They want to stay. And I don't want to stay. We were supposed to be in Syria for 30 days. We've now been there for 10 years. We were supposed to be in Afghanistan for a short period of time. We're now going to be there for close to 19 years. It's time to bring them home. It's time to bring them home. It's true. Time to bring them home.

We've done our job, we've defeated everyone that we're supposed to defeat. And now we are, we are policing, we are now policing. That's what we're doing. We're policing. And that, as I said, no more respect for the police, but these are military people, and those are police, but we are now policing. We're not fighting, we're policing.

And you know what? After all of these years ... One other story, and I have to tell you. I go to Walter Reed on Friday, and I do it quite often. I gave out five Purple Hearts. And I meet people that are so beautiful, so amazing. I met five warriors, and one was so badly hurt, with the loss of arms and a leg, another one ... they're just very, very devastated. But these are great, great people.

And I gave out the Purple Heart. And I see the parents, and I have to say, Walter Reed, I want to just say, the doctors there, the job they do, you know, you hear so many complaints about doctors and about the vets, and the vets' care, and nobody's done better. We got choice for the vets. We did things for the vets that nobody thought would be possible.

But I saw these young men, and I gave them their Purple Hearts. And their parents were there crying. And one of them was so amazing. I said, "What's your problem?" "Sir, my face was blown apart. My nose was absolutely just blown apart." He said, "Sir, it's incredible." And I looked at him, I said, "That's the most beautiful nose I've ever seen. What do you mean?" He said, "A doctor worked on my face for 10 hours in the field. He said there were a thousand fragments." Now I don't know if that's right, but well, a lot. He meant a lot.

"He said there were a thousand fragments. He rebuilt my nose with glue. He glued the bones together. He rebuilt my nose." I say, "You have the most beautiful nose I've ever seen," and it's true. And his father came over to me, he said, "Sir," father was crying, he said, "Sir, honestly, my son looks better now." He said, "My son did not have a good look. He knows. Now look at it, it's beautiful, it's beautiful."

But these doctors at Walter Reed, and these Army, and Marine, and the medical doctors, they are unbelievably great people. And they see sights that you and I hopefully will never see. They see things that nobody will ever see, and there's nobody like them. And I have to give a shout out to those people, there's nobody like them. So in the case of Turkey, and Syria, and the Kurds, we could send in a thousand troops for a military conflict with Turkey. No, you don't want to do that. We could hit Turkey very hard financially. Or we could mediate a deal between Turkey and the Kurds. I like that. You know? Let's mediate a deal. But remember they've been fighting each other for hundreds of years, and we were artificially put there, in this case by President Obama. So we did our job. We knocked out.

And I'll tell you another thing, we have to be treated fairly. We have to be treated fairly. We're not treated fairly by other nations. We captured many, many ISIS fighters. Most of them came from Europe. They came from Germany. They came from France. They came from all of these countries. And we called them, I called them myself in many cases, I said, "Take your fighters." They said, "We don't want them. You take them."

I said, "No, no, no, we did you a big favor. They're citizens of Germany. They're citizens of France. They're citizens of these various countries in Europe. Take your fighters." "We don't want them, sir. We don't want them." And I said, "How unfair are we treated? We do them a great favor, and they won't take the fighters."

Donald Trump: (01:42:23)

So we're doing some things that are pretty amazing. Every once in a while you have to change course, and do what you have to do. The United States has spent $8 trillion in the Middle East. We've lost thousands of brave soldiers, and tens of thousands of terribly wounded people, great people, their lives will never be the same. These wars produced only chaos and bloodshed. And all of the blood and treasure we sacrificed, made the Middle East, really it's less safe, it's less stable, and it's less secure. And I say it all the time. The single greatest mistake our country made in its history was going in to the quicksand of the Middle East. We spent $8 trillion and lost thousands of lives. And by the way, the other side, we can talk about that, lost millions of lives. What did we do?

So we're going to pull them out, and we're pulling people out, and we're trying to make good deals, and we're going to bring our soldiers back home, and we may need them for something else, and they'll be ready. Previous administrations lust for regime change, and also put historic Christian communities in vastly more danger than they were before we started. They are some of the biggest victims of these power vacuums and reckless foreign adventures. The Christians, the Christians. And we work hard with the Christians. We have tremendous evangelical support. We work hard with the Christians.

Donald Trump: (01:44:13)

So we're slowly getting out of the Middle East. We're doing it carefully. And we're rebuilding our military like we have never rebuilt our military before. When I came into office, a very prominent general told me, because it looked like we could have a big conflict with someone, said, "Sir, we have no ammunition." We had old planes. We had planes that were so old, they didn't fly. We had people going to the desert, the plane graveyards, airplane graveyards, picking up parts. I never want to hear a President of the United States hear those words again. I never want to have a President hear the words, "Sir, we have no ammunition." Think of that. Think of that.

Donald Trump: (01:45:06)

Now, thanks to more than two and a half trillion dollar worth of investment in our military, we have more ammunition, more missiles, more rockets, more tanks, more fighter jets, and more of everything else than we've ever had before. And we have no choice. You look around the world, and we have no choice, unfortunately. And the Democrats want to dismantle our military. After years of building up other countries, we are finally building up our country. That's what we have to do.

Donald Trump: (01:45:50)

We're replacing the disaster known as NAFTA with the brand new U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement, USMCA, a giant victory for our farmers, ranchers, workers in Minnesota. Congress should pass USMCA immediately. We hope that Nancy Pelosi can start thinking about passing some legislation instead of thinking about nonsense.

Donald Trump: (01:46:18)

And to protect our industrial backbone, I placed tariffs on foreign aluminum and foreign steel. I'm also fighting back against years of chronic trade abuse from China. And the supply chain of China, which was unbreakable, is now breaking wide open. And they understand that. And I don't blame China for what's taken place over the last 25 years. I blame the people that led our country that let that happen, where hundreds of billions of dollars a year was taken from our country to build China. It's not China's fault.

Donald Trump: (01:47:05)

In the previous administration, they put our nation's natural resources under lock and key, including thousands and thousands of acres in a place called Superior National Forest. Last year, I traveled to Duluth and announced that we would be ending this injustice, reopening Superior National Forest, and restoring mineral exploration for the iron ore mines of Minnesota. Tremendous jobs.

And now the iron range is back in business. The last time I was here, a man came up to me, he said, "Sir, President Obama took our heart away, took our life away.' I'll never forget it. A man, strong guy, had tears in his eyes. He said, "You gave us back our life," because they took it away from him. We gave it back. Best iron ore there is anywhere.

My administration is also fighting the Democrat socialist healthcare agenda that would obliterate Medicare. Republicans will protect Medicare, and we will always protect patients with preexisting conditions. And for those of you that have private healthcare, health insurance, 180 million people, they are going to end it, obliterate it, and most people are thrilled with it. We are going to leave it. You're going to have your plan the way you want it. And there's no plan like those plans.

Donald Trump: (01:48:56)

Virtually every top Democrat also now supports late term abortion, ripping babies straight from the mother's womb, right up to the moment of birth. That is why I've asked Congress to prohibit extreme late term abortion, because Republicans believe that every child is a sacred gift from God. Democrats are now the party of high taxes, high crime, open borders, late term abortion, socialism, and blatant Washington corruption. The Republican Party is the party of the American worker, the American family, and it's the party of the American Dream.

Donald Trump: (01:49:58)

For years, you watched as your politicians apologized for America. You remember that? Gee, I'm sorry, I'm so sorry. Now you have a President who's standing up for America, we are standing up for Minneapolis, and we are standing up for the great state of Minnesota.

Donald Trump: (01:50:29)

We begin this political campaign with the best record, the best results, the best agenda, and the only positive vision for America. We begin this campaign with right now almost three years of perhaps the most successful administration in the history of our country. Together, we will help millions more citizens from welfare to work, from dependence to independence, and from poverty to prosperity.

Donald Trump: (01:51:12)

With your help, we will reelect, and we will elect a Republican Congress to create a safe, modern, fair, and lawful system of immigration. We will enact trade deals that ensure more products are proudly stamped with that beautiful phrase Made in the USA. We will achieve new breakthroughs in science and medicine, finding new cures for childhood cancer, and ending the AIDS epidemic in America within 10 years. Nobody thought that could be done. Going to be done.

We will defend privacy, free speech, free assembly, religious liberty, and the right to keep and bear arms. And above all, we will never stop fighting for the values that bind us together as one America. We support, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States. We stand with the incredible heroes of law enforcement. We believe in the dignity of work, and the sanctity of life.

We believe that children should be taught to love our country, honor our history, and always respect our great American flag. And we live by the words of our great national motto, In God We Trust. We stand on the shoulders of American Patriots who built this country into the greatest nation ever to exist in history. Our ancestors crossed the oceans, settled a continent, tamed the wilderness, revolutionized industry, pioneered science, won two World Wars, defeated fascism and communism, and put a man on the face of the moon. Proud citizens like the people of Minnesota helped build this country, and together we are taking back our country. We are returning power to you, the American people.

Donald Trump: (01:54:19)

With your help, your devotion, your drive, we are going to keep on working, we are going to keep on fighting, and we are going to keep on winning, winning, winning, winning. We are one movement, one people, one family, and one glorious nation under God. America is thriving like never before. And ladies and gentlemen of Minnesota, I will tell you this with great certainty, the best is yet to come.

Donald Trump: (01:55:25)

Thank you very much.

Donald Trump: (01:55:27)

And just in concluding, together we will make America wealthy again, we will make America strong again, we will make America safe again, and we will make America great again. Thank you, Minnesota. Thank you.

Chapter 20 Conclusions & Comments Re: Minneapolis Speech

How can anybody top that? Certainly not me in whatever I do in life.

The media talk of the week before this great speech / rally and the talk of the week ending October 19, was impeachment, impeachment and impeachment. The perspective at the time was that this was a manufactured representation of a phone call between Donald Trump, our president and the president of the Ukraine. Guess upon which side the corrupt media positioned itself. No sense guessing when we know their MO.

The Dems decided to remove Trump from the moment he was a threat to Hillary Clinton's assured election. They have been working on it for over three years. If it were not for the people's objection Hillary would have been the crowned princess or Queen of the US. Perhaps we would no longer need a president.

The good ole corrupt mainstream media out-did themselves in this period though their record has been about the same ever since Donald Trump came down the elevator to announce his candidacy about four years ago. Relentless lies by this group masquerading as the US Fourth Estate have duped countless Americans into believing Trump was the bad guy and not the corrupt press.

Though he talked about the Ukraine controversy, impeachment, and his Democratic opponent Joe Biden, President Donald Trump had plenty to say about Minneapolis politics in his visit to Minnesota Thursday, October 10, 2019.

And it was a hit with the inside crowd of 25,000, the outside crowd of 20,000 and happy supporters who got to see the whole deal, some of us twice on Fox news. Every now and then anymore, Fox does something that we like. Donna Brazille and her friends are not part of any kudos the conservatives feel for Fox.

Trump took his speech gun out to aim directly at Rep. Ilhan Omar. This hate America first "lady" Congressman represents Minnesota's 5th District. Nobody thought Trump would be well received by this arena which covers Minneapolis. Omar is looked upon as part of the "radical left" now controlling the Democratic Party. They were few and far between at the event and those that spoke up were police fodder and they were quickly escorted out to the smiles and applaud of people who love their city and state and hate Omar in the same fashion that Omar hates Trump.

Trump knew the crowd was on his side and he enjoyed taunting them and they enjoyed being taunted on this point: "How the hell did that ever happen?" he asked the crowd, referring to Omar's election to Congress. For that, he seemed to joke, "I'm very angry at you people right now.

Trump minced no words as usual calling her an "America-hating socialist." The president proved his point by noting Omar as the author of writing "anti-semitic screeds." Who would be for America folks, if it were not for Israel and BB Netanyahu. It would not be Omar and her anti-American and anti-Israel propogandists.

Trump minces no words and he recognizes his enemies perfectly. So, he brought up rumors regarding her previous marriage and entry into the U.S., and he had no problem declaring her "a disgrace to our country.” I don’t recall a counter speech in which the famous Muslim Congresswoman denied her anti-American posture. I don’t recall the love of the pledge allegiance. I don’t recall any effective defense of Trump basically accusing this Minneapolis politician as being anti-American.

Yet, the all-Minnesota crowd loved it.

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey, who had a face-down with Republicans about security and the police was also the brunt of the president's truth attacks. Trump again minced no words but fired off, to the intense crowd: "you've got a rotten mayor." His reaction to that was that they already knew it.

To outflank the Mayor, Trump brought up police with "Cops for Trump" shirts onto stage at his Minneapolis rally. He called Jacob Frey a very weak mayor. The Mayor forbade cops to wear their uniforms to protect the president. They could not make the arena safe by wearing their police garb. But they turned out to protect Trump et al, anyway.

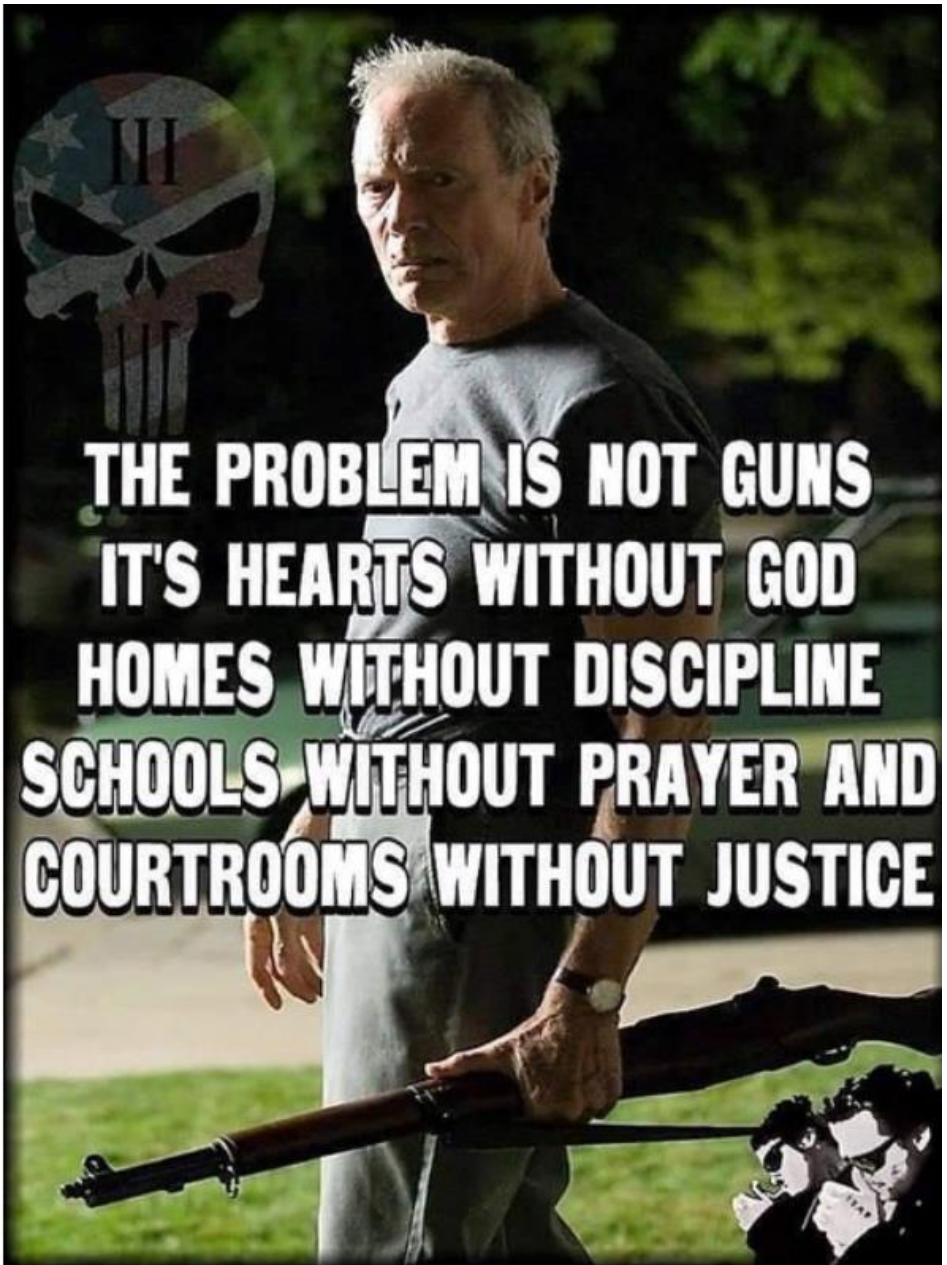

All the excitement at this rally came in the wake of a public feud between the president and the mayor over the latter's attempt to collect rally costs from the Trump campaign up front.. When the issue of immigration came up, Trump referred to the local Somali population, and promised to give local governments greater say in vetting immigrants and refugees.

At the Rally, the President had positive words to say about Minneapolis and Minnesota. He gave particular praise to Lt. Bob Kroll, president of the Minneapolis police union and all the great police who came with their red “Cops” shirts in full regalia. Mr. Kroll had previously appeared on Fox News criticizing the Mayor over the "Cops for Trumps" T-shirt controversy. He was brought up on stage with several other officers to major applause. . Trump was most complimentary:

“I think your very weak mayor made a mistake when he took them on.”

President Trump does the research before he addresses the crowds at his rallies. For example, as he brought his speech to a positive conclusion, he vowed to restore life to Minnesota's Iron Range, mentioning opening up the region's "iron" mines again:

Clint Eastwood On Trump!

Hate has no reason to be in any heart!

People message me why I stick my neck out for Trump. Why do I tarnish my reputation with a man that's hated by so many. I don't care how much the media twists what he says. I don't care how bad he looks. I don't care about his sex life. At all. I don't even care that his language skills are not academic. I only look at what he does and what his policies accomplish. I see a booming economy. I see low unemployment rates. I see African Americans back at work. I see American companies that had fled overseas returning home. I see the oldest President staying up til 3 am in a suit on Airforce One waiting to greet our prisoners returning from Korea. I see China paying attention to him and returning to the negotiation table. I see him strengthening Israel, standing by Netanyahu, recognizing Jerusalem, saying Shehekhianu. I see him freeing Iran from a devastating regime. I see him tough on terrorism. I see a man who's delivering on every promise he made, not just talking to get votes. I see a lover of America. One who defends his men in uniform stronger than anyone I've ever seen. One who is proud of his flag, without feeling sorry, without excuses. I see an American hero. Let them say what they will. Trump is a hero. You will see. I love America. He loves America. I love him as our President. No one is without fault. We hired a man to do a job. He has surpassed my expectations in record time, single handedly fighting the establishment. And he's doing it for free... Stop listening to talking heads. Look at policies. I'm proud to support Trump....

Said by Eastwood or not, this is the truth.

I am a big fan of Clint Eastwood. He has often made my day. I cannot verify whether Eastwood said all this including what is scribed on his picture. I can believe that he did but I cannot be sure. I found somebody in the same quandary as I talking about this freely on the Internet and here is what they had to say. Take it for what it says. If Clint Eastwood gives me a call or complains, when I print this book the next time, these two pages will not be in the text .

"I do not believe it is from Clint Eastwood; rather, I think the commenter who responded shared the reality of the quote. We all want to believe someone famous agrees with the Lord, but even if it were not so, 1 Sam 16:7 gives us a pointer: "The Lord said to Samuel, 'Do not consider his appearance or his height, for I have rejected him. The Lord does not look at the things man looks at. Man looks at the outward appearance, but the Lord looks at the heart'."
